An o'erpreſs'd Roman, and i' th' conſul's view
Slew three oppoſers: Tarquin's ſelf he met,
And ſtruck him on his knee. Shakeſpeare.
Let us rather
Hold faſt the mortal ſword; and, like good men,
Beſtride our downfaln birthdom. Shakeſpeare.
If thou ſee me down in the battle, and beſtride me, ſo; 'tis a point of friendſhip. Shakeſpeare.
He doth beſtride a bleeding land,
Gaſping for life, under great Bolingbroke. Shakeſpeare.

To BESTU'D. v. a. [from ſtud.] To adorn with ſtuds, or ſhining prominences.

Th' unſought diamonds
Would ſo emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And ſo beſtud with ſtars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light. Milton.

BET. n. ſ. [ſeobian, to wager; þeb, a wager, Sax. from which the etymologiſts derive bet. I ſhould rather imagine it to come from beran, to mend, encreaſe, or better, as a bet encreaſes the original wager.] A wager; ſomething laid to be won upon certain conditions.

The hoary fool, who many days
Has ſtruggl'd with continu'd ſorrow,
Renews his hope, and blindly lays
The deſp'rate bet upon to-morrow. Prior.
His pride was in piquette,
Newmarket fame, and judgment at a bet. Pope.

With well-tim'd zeal, and with an artful care,
Reſtor'd, and better'd ſoon, the nice affair. Cowley.

The church of England, the pureſt and beſt reformed church in the world; ſo well reformed, that it will be found eaſier to alter than to better its conſtitution. South.

The Romans took pains to hew out a paſſage for theſe lakes, to diſcharge themſelves, for the bettering of the air. Addiſon.

2. To ſurpaſs; to exceed.

The works of nature do always aim at that which cannot be bettered. Hooker.

He hath born himſelf beyond the promiſe of his age; he hath, indeed, better bettered expectation, than you muſt expect of me to tell you. Shakeſpeare.

What you do
Still betters what is done; when you ſpeak ſweet,
I'd have you do it ever. Shakeſpeare.

3. To advance.

BE'TTER. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] Superiour in goodneſs.

Their betters would be hardly found, if they did not live among men, but in a wilderneſs by themſelves. Hooker.

The courteſy of nations allows you my better, in that you are the firſt-born. Shakeſpeare.

That ye thus hoſpitably live,
Is mighty grateful to your betters,
And makes e'en gods themſelves your debtors. Prior.

I have ſome gold and ſilver by me, and ſhall be able to make a ſhift, when many of my betters are ſtarving. Swift.

BE'TTOR. n. ſ. [from to bet.] One that lays betts or wagers.

I obſerved a ſtranger among them, of a genteeler behaviour than ordinary; but notwithſtanding he was a very fair bettor, nobody would take him up. Addiſon.

BE'TTY. n. ſ. [probably a cant word, without etymology.] An inſtrument to break open doors.

Record the ſtratagems, the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal ſcalades of needy heroes, deſcribing the powerful betty, or the artful picklock. Arbuthnot.

BETWE'EN. prep. [betpeonan, betpinan, Saxon; from the original word tpa, two.]

And hound ſagacious on the tainted green? Pope.

2. From

4. From one to another; noting intercourse.
He should think himself unhappy, if things should go so between them, as he should not be able to acquit himself of ingratitude towards them both. Bacon.
3. Belonging to two in partnership.
I ask, whether Castor and Pollux, with only one soul between them, which thinks and perceives in one what the other is never conscious of, are not two distinct persons? Locke.
4. Bearing relation to two.
If there be any discord or suits between them and any of the family, they are compounded and appeased. Bacon.
Friendship requires, that it be between two at least; and there can be no friendship where there are not two friends. South.
5. In separation, or distinction of one from the other.
Their natural constitutions put so wide a difference between some men, that art would never master. Locke.
Children quickly distinguish between what is required of them, and what not. Locke.
6. Between is properly used of two, and among of more; but perhaps this accuracy is not always preserved.

BETWI'XT. prep. [betpyx, Saxon. It has the same signification with between, and is indifferently used for it.]
1. In the midst of two.
Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes,
From betwixt two aged oaks. Milton.
Methinks, like two black storms on either hand,
Our Spanish army and your Indians stand;
This only place betwixt the clouds is clear. Dryden.
If contradicting interests could be mixt,
Nature herself has cast a bar betwixt. Dryden.
2. From one to another.
Five years since there was some speech of marriage
Betwixt myself and her. Shakespeare.

BE'VEL. } n. s. In masonry and joinery, a kind of square, one
BE'VIL. } leg of which is frequently crooked, according to the sweep of an arch or vault. It is moveable on a point or centre, and so may be set to any angle. An angle that is not square, is called a bevil angle, whether it be more obtuse, or more acute, than a right angle. Builder's Dict.
There houses are very ill built, their walls bevil, without one right angle in any apartment. Swift.

To BE'VEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut to a bevel angle.
These rabbets are ground square; but the rabbets on the groundsel are bevelled downwards, that rain may the freelier fall off. Moxon.

BE'VER. See BEAVER.

BE'VERAGE. n. s. [from bevere, to drink, Ital.]
1. Drink; liquor to be drank in general.
I am his cupbearer;
If from me he have wholsome beverage,
Account me not your servant. Shakespeare.
Grains, pulses, and all sorts of fruits, either bread or beverage, may be made almost of all. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd. Dryden.
The coarse lean gravel on the mountain sides,
Scarce dewy bev'rage from the bees provides. Dryden.
2. Beverage, or water cyder, is made by putting the mure into a fat, adding water, as you desire it stronger or smaller. The water should stand forty eight hours on it, before you press it; when it is pressed, turn it up immediately. Mortimer.
3. A treat upon wearing a new suit of cloaths.
4. A treat at first coming into a prison, called also garnish.

BE'VY. n. s. [beva, Ital.]
1. A flock of birds.
2. A company; an assemby.

A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,
Courted of many a jolly paramour. Fairy Queen.
They on the plain
Long had not walk'd, when, from the tents, behold
A bevy of fair women. Milton.
Nor rode the nymph alone,
Around a bevy of bright damsels shone. Pope.

To BEWA'IL. v. a. [from wail.] To bemoan; to lament; to express sorrow for.
In this city he
Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakespeare.
Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham, my father in law. Shakespeare.
Yet wiser Ennius gave command to all
His friends, not to bewail his funeral. Sir J. Denham.
I cannot but bewail, as in their first principles, the miseries and calamities of our children. Addison.

To BEWARE. v. n. [from be and ware, or wary; that is, cautious: thus, in an old treatise, I have found, be ye ware. See WARY. Depapian, Saxon; varer, Danish.]
1. To regard with caution; to be suspicious of danger from: generally the particle of goes before the thing which excites caution.
You must beware of drawing or painting clouds, winds; and thunder, towards the bottom of your piece. Dryden.
Every one ought to be very careful to beware what he admits for a principle. Locke.
Warn'd by the sylph, oh, pious maid, beware!
This to disclose is all thy guardian can;
Beware of all, but most beware of man. Pope.
2. It is observable, that it is only used in such forms of speech as admit the word be: thus we say, he may beware, let him beware, he will beware; but not, he did beware, or he has been ware.

To BEWEEP, v. a. [from weep.] To weep over or upon; to bedew with tears.
Old fond eyes,
Beweep this cause again; I'll pluck ye out,
And cast you; with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay. Shakespeare.
Larded all with sweet flowers;
Which bewept to the grave did go;
With true love showers. Shakespeare.

To BEWE'T. v. a. [from wet.] To wet; to moisten; to bedew; to water.
His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.
Shakesp. Titus Andronicus.

To BEWI'LDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose in pathless places; to confound for want of a plain road; to perplex; to entangle; to puzzle.
We parted thus; I homeward sped my way,
Bewilder'd in the wood till dawn of day. Dryden.
We no solution of our question find;
Your words bewilder, not direct the mind. Blackmore.
Our understanding traces 'em in vain,
Lost and bewilder'd in the fruitless search. Addison.
It is good sometimes to lose and bewilder ourselves in such studies. Watts.

To BEWI'TCH. v. a. [from witch.]
1. To injure by witchcraft, or fascination; or charms.
Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is like a blasted sapling wither'd up. Shakespeare.
I have forsworn his company hourly this twenty year, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal has not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hang'd. Shakespeare.
My flocks are free from love, yet look so thin;
What magick has bewitch'd the woolly dams;
And what ill eyes beheld the tender lambs? Dryden.
2. To charm; to please to such a degree, as to take away the power of resistance.
Doth even beauty beautify,
And most bewitch the wretched eye. Sidney.
The charms of poetry our souls bewitch;
The curse of writing is an endless itch. Dryden.
I do not know, by the character that is given of her works, whether it is not for the benefit of mankind that they were lost; they were filled with such bewitching tenderness and rapture, that it might have been dangerous to have given them a reading. Addison.

BEWI'TCHERY. n. s. [from bewitch.] Fascination; charm; resistless prevalence.
There is a certain bewitchery, or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can give an account of. South.

BEWI'TCHMENT. n. s. [from bewitch.] Fascination; power of charming.
I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Shakespeare.

To BEWRA'Y. v. a. [pnegan, bepnegan, Saxon.]
1. To betray; to discover perfidiously.
Fair feeling words he wisely 'gan display,
And, for her humour fitting purpose, fain
To tempt the cause itself for to bewray. Fairy Queen.
2. To shew; to make visible: this word is now little in use.
She saw a pretty blush in Philodea's cheeks bewray a modest discontentment. Sidney.
Men do sometimes bewray that by deeds, which to confess they are hardly drawn. Hooker.
Next look on him that seems for counsel fit,
Whose silver locks bewray his store of days. Fairfax.

BEWRA'YER. n. s. [from bewray.] Betrayer; discoverer; divulger.
When a friend is turned into an anemy, and a bewrayer of secrets, the world is just enough to accuse the perfidiousness of the friend. Addison.

BEYO'ND. prep. [begeond, begeondan, Saxon.]
1. Before; at a distance not yet reached.
What's fame? a fancy'd life in others breath,
A thing beyond us, ev'n before our death
Just what you hear, you have. Pope.
2. On the farther side of.
Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us. Deut. xxx. 13.

Now we are on land, we are but between death and life; for we are beyond the old world and the new. Bacon's New Atlantis.

We cannot think men beyond sea will part with their money for nothing. Locke.

3. Farther onward than.

He that sees a dark and shady grove,
Stays not, but looks beyond it on the sky. Herbert.

4. Past; out of the reach of.

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou did'st this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Shakespeare.

Yet these declare
Thy goodness beyond thought, and pow'r divine.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

The just, wise, and good God, neither does, nor can require of man any thing that is impossible, or naturally beyond his power to do. South.

Consider the situation of our earth; it is placed so conveniently, that plants flourish, and animals live; this is matter of fact, and beyond all dispute. Bentley.

5. Above; exceeding to a greater degree than.

Timotheus was a man both in power, riches, parentage, goodness, and love of his people, beyond any of the great men of my country. Sidney.

One thing, in this enormous accident, is, I must confess, to me beyond all wonder. Wotton.

To his expences, beyond his income, add debauchery, idleness, and quarrels amongst his servants, whereby his manufactures are disturbed, and his business neglected. Locke.

As far as they carry conviction to any man's understanding, my labour may be of use: beyond the evidence it carries with it, I advise him not to follow any man's interpretation. Locke.

6. Above in excellence.

His satires are incomparably beyond Juvenal's; if to laugh and rally, is to be preferred to railing and declaiming. Dryden.

7. Remote from; not within the sphere of.

With equal mind, what happens, let us bear;
Nor joy, nor grieve too much for things beyond our care.
Dryden's Fables.

8. To go beyond, is to deceive; to circumvent.

She made earnest benefit of his jest, forcing him to do her such services, as were both cumbersome and costly; while he still thought he went beyond her, because his heart did not commit the idolatry. Sidney.

That no man go beyond, and defraud his brother in any matter. 1 Thess. iv. 6.

BE'ZEL. } n. s. That part of a ring in which the stone is BE'ZIL. } fixed.

BE'ZOAR. n. s. [from pa, against, and zahar, poison, Persick.] A medicinal stone, formerly in high esteem as an antidote, and brought from the East Indies, where it is said to be found in the dung of an animal of the goat kind, called pazan; the stone being formed in its belly, and growing to the size of an acorn, and sometimes to that of a pigeon's egg. Were the real virtues of this stone answerable to its reputed ones, it were doubtless a panacea. Indeed its rarity, and the peculiar manner of its formation, which is now supposed to be fabulous, have perhaps contributed as much to its reputation as its intrinsick worth. At present, it begins to be discarded in the practice of medicine, as of no efficacy at all. There are also some occidental bezoars brought from Peru, which are reckoned inferiour to the oriental. The name of this stone is also applied to several chymical compositions, designed for antidotes, or counter poisons; as mineral, solar, and jovial bezoars. Savary. Chambers.

BEZOA'RDICK. adj. [from bezoar.] Medicines compounded with bezoar.

The bezoardicks are necessary to promote sweat, and drive forth the putrefied particles. Floyer.

BIA'NGULATED. } adj. [from binus and angulus, Lat.] Having BIA'NGULOUS. } corners or angles. Dict.

BI'AS. n. s. [biais, Fr. said to come from bibay, an old Gaulish word, signifying cross, or thwart.]

1. The weight lodged on one side of a bowl, which turns it from the strait line.

Madam, we'll play at bowls——
——'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,
And that my fortune runs against the bias. Shakespeare.

2. Any thing which turns a man to a particular course; or gives the direction to his measures.

You have been mistook:
But nature to her bias drew in that. Shakespeare.

This is that boasted bias of thy mind,
By which one way to dulness 'tis inclined. Dryden.

Morality influences mens lives, and gives a bias to all their actions. Locke.

Wit and humour, that expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions. Raillery under such regulations, unbends the mind from severer contemplations, without throwing it off from its proper bias. Addison's Freeholder.

Thus nature gives us, let it check our pride,
The virtue nearest to our vice ally'd;
Reason the bias turns to good or ill. Pope.

3. Propension; inclination.

As for the religion of our poet, he seems to have some little bias towards the opinions of Wickliff. Dryden.

To BI'AS. v. a. [from the noun.] To incline to some side; to balance one way; to prejudice.

Were I in no more danger to be misled by ignorance, than I am to be biassed by interest, I might give a very perfect account. Locke.

A desire leaning to either side, biasses the judgment strangely; by indifference for every thing but truth, you will be excited to examine. Watts.

BI'AS. adv. It seems to be used adverbially in the following passage, conformably to the French, mettre une chose de biais, to give any thing a wrong interpretation.

Every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim.
Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

BIB. n. s. A small piece of linen put upon the breasts of children over their cloaths.

I would fain know, why it should not be as noble a task, to write upon a bib and hanging-sleeves, as on the bulla and prætexta. Addison.

To BIB. v. n. [bibo, Lat.] To tipple; to sip; to drink frequently.

He playeth with bibbing mother Meroë, as though she were so named, because she would drink mere wine without water. Camden.

To appease a froward child, they gave him drink as often as he cried; so that he was constantly bibbing, and drank more in twenty four hours than I did. Locke.

This beloved young woman began to take off the binding of his eyes. Tatler.

BI'NDWEED. n. ſ. [convolvulus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath, for the moſt part, trailing ſtalks; the leaves grow alternately on the branches; the flower conſiſts of one leaf, ſhaped like a bell, whoſe mouth is widely expanded; the ovary becomes a roundiſh membraneous fruit, wrapped up within the flower cup; and is generally divided into three cells, each containing one angular ſeed. The ſpecies are thirty-ſix. 1. The common white great bindweed, vulgarly called bearbind. 2. Leſſer field bindweed, with a roſe coloured flower, vulgarly called gravelbind. 3. Common ſea bindweed, with round leaves. 4. Great American bindweed, with ſpacious yellow ſweet ſcented flowers, commonly called Spaniſh arbour vine, or Spaniſh woodbine. 5. White and yellow Spaniſh potatoes. 6. Red Spaniſh potatoes. 7. The jalap, &c. The firſt of theſe ſpecies is a very troubleſome weed in gardens; and the ſecond ſort is ſtill a worſe weed than the former. The third ſort is found upon gravelly or ſandy ſhores, where the ſalt water overflows: this is a ſtrong purge, and, as ſuch, is often uſed in medicine. The fourth ſort is common in the hot parts of America, and is planted to cover arbours and ſeats: one of theſe plants will grow to the length of ſixty or an hundred feet, and produce great quantities of ſide branches, and large fragrant yellow flowers, ſucceeded by three large angular ſeeds. The two kinds of potatoes are much cultivated in the Weſt Indies, for food; and, from the roots, a drink is made, called mobby, ſtronger or weaker: it is a ſprightly liquour, but not ſubject to fly into the head; nor will it keep beyond four or five days. Theſe roots have been brought from America, and are cultivated in Spain and Portugal; but, in general, they are not ſo well liked as the common potato, being too ſweet and luſcious. The jalap, whoſe root has been long uſed in medicine, is a native of the province of Italapa, about two days journey from La Vera Cruz. Miller.

Bindweed is of two ſorts, the larger and the ſmaller; the firſt ſort flowers in September, and the laſt in June and July. Mortimer.

The poor wren,
The moſt diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her neſt, againſt the owl. Macbeth.

Sh' had all the regal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward confeſſor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace, and all ſuch emblems,
Laid nobly on her. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

The bird of Jove ſtoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayeſt plume before him drove.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Hence men and beaſts the breath of life obtain,
And birds of air, and monſters of the main. Dryden's Æn.

There are ſome birds that are inhabitants of the water, whoſe blood is cold as fiſhes, and their fleſh is ſo like in taſte, that the ſcrupulous are allowed them on fiſh days. Locke.

Some ſquire perhaps you take delight to rack,
Who viſits with a gun, preſents with birds. Pope.

To BIRD v. n. [from the noun.] To catch birds.

I do invite you tomorrow morning to my houſe, to breakfaſt; after, we'll a birding together. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.

BI'RDBOLT. n. ſ. [from bird and bolt, or arrow.] A ſmall ſhot, or arrow, to be ſhot at birds.

To be generous, guiltleſs, and of free diſpoſition, is to take thoſe things for birdbolts, that you deem cannon bullets.

Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

BI'RDLIME. n. ſ. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous ſubſtance, which is ſpread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are entangled.

Birdlime is made of the bark of holly, boiled for ten or twelve hours; and when the green coat is ſeparated from the other, they cover it up for a fortnight, in a moiſt place, and pound it into a tough paſte, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is waſhed in a running ſtream, till no motes appear, and put up to ferment for four or five days, and ſcummed as often as any thing ariſes, and then laid up for uſe; at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut oil, over the fire. The birdlime brought from Damaſcus is ſuppoſed to be made of ſebeſtens, the kernels being frequently found in it; but this will not endure the froſt or wet. That brought from Spain is of an ill ſmell; but the bark of our lantone, or wayfaring ſhrub, will make very good birdlime. Chambers.

Holly is of ſo viſcous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

With ſtores of gather'd glue, contrive
To ſtop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or Idean pitch, produce
A more tenacious maſs of clammy juice. Dryden's Virgil.

To BOLSTER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To support the head with a bolster.
2. To afford a bed to.
Mortal eyes do see them bolster,
More than their own. Shakespeare's Othello.
3. To hold wounds together with a compress.
The practice of bolstering the cheeks forward, does little service to the wound, and is very uneasy to the patient. Sharp.
4. To support; to hold up; to maintain. This is now an expression somewhat coarse and obsolete.
We may be made wiser by the publick persuasions grafted in men's minds, so they be used to further the truth, not to bolster errour. Hooker.
The lawyer sets his tongue to sale for the bolstering out of unjust causes. Hakewill.
It was the way of many to bolster up their crazy, doating consciences with confidences. South.

BOLT. n. s. [boult, Dutch; βέλος.]
1. An arrow; a dart shot from a crossbow.
Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell;
It fell upon a little western flower;
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound.
Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.
The blunted bolt against the nymph he drest;
Put, with the sharp, transfix'd Apollo's breast. Dryden.
2. Lightning; a thunderbolt.
Sing'd with the flames, and with the bolts transfix'd,
With native earth your blood the monsters mix'd. Dryden.
3. Bolt upright; that is, upright as an arrow.
Brush iron, native or from the mine, consisteth of long fibre, about the thickness of a small knitting needle, bolt upright, like the bristles of a stiff brush. Grew.
As I stood bolt upright upon one end, one of the ladies burst out. Addison's Spectator, N° 90.
4. The bar of a door, so called from being straight, like an arrow; we now say, shoot the bolt, when we speak of fastening or opening a door.
'Tis not in thee, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in. Shakespeare's King Lear.
5. An iron to fasten the legs of a prisoner.
Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him.
Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
6. A spot or stain. See BLOOD-BOLTERED.
That supernal judge, that stirs good thoughts
In my breast, of strong authority,
To look into the bolts and stains of right. Shakespeare.

To BOLT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shut or fasten with a bolt.
The bolted gates flew open, at the blast;
The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast. Dryden.
2. To blurt out, or throw out precipitantly.
I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton.
3. To fasten, as a bolt or pin; to pin; to keep together.
That I could reach the axel, where the pins are,
Which bolt this frame; that I might pull them out. B. Jo. N. A. II.
4. To fetter; to shackle.
It is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
5. To sift; or separate the parts of any thing with a sieve. [bluter, Fr.]
Sacring, he now had bolted all the flour,
And that it was a groom of base degree,
Which of my love was partner. Spenser.
In the bolting and sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal. Wotton.
I cannot bolt this matter to the bran,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden's Fables.
6. To examine by sifting; to try out; to lay open.
It would be well bolted out, whether great retractions may not be made upon reflections, as well as upon direct beams.
Bacon's Natural History.
The judge, or jury, or parties, or the council, or attornies, propounding occasional questions, beats and bolts out the truth much better than when the witness delivers only a formal series.
Hale's History of the Common Law.
Time and nature will bolt out the truth of things, through all disguises. L'Estrange.
7. To purify; to purge.
The fanned snow
That's bolted by the northern blast twice o'er. Shakespeare.

To BOLT. v. n. To spring out with speed and suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow.
This Puck seems but a dreaming dolt,
Still walking like a ragged colt,
And oft out of a bush doth bolt,
Of purpose to deceive us. Drayton's Nymphid.
They erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the forest, sometimes into the woods and fastnesses, and sometimes back again to their den.
Bacon's War with Spain.
As the house was all in a flame, out bolts a mouse from the ruins, to save herself L'Estrange.
I have reflected on those men who, from time to time, have shot themselves into the world. I have seen many successions of them; some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off. Dryden.
The birds to foreign seats repair'd,
And beasts, that bolted out, and saw the forest bar'd. Dryd.

BO'LTSPRIT. } n. s. A mast running out at the head of a ship,
BO'WSPRIT. } not standing upright, but aslope. The but-end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the boltsprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Boltsprit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dictionary.
Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards, and bowsprit, would I flame distinctly. Shakesp.

BO'LUS. n. s. [βόλος.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.
Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wiseman.
By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.

BOMB. n. s. [bombus, Lat.]
1. A loud noise.
There was an upper chamber, which being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise noiſe in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath.

Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

2. A hollow iron ball, or ſhell, filled with gunpowder, and furniſhed with a vent for a fuſee, or wooden tube, filled with combuſtible matter; to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noiſe it makes. The fuſee, being ſet on fire, burns ſlowly till it reach the gunpowder, which goes off at once, burſting the ſhell to pieces with incredible violence; whence the uſe of bombs in beſieging towns. The largeſt are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain, ſome fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon miſſive iron pours,
And in the ſlaught'ring bomb Gradivus roars. Rowe.

To BOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

1. Cords, or chains, with which any one is bound.

There left me, and my man, both bound together;
Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds aſunder,
I gain'd my freedom. Shakeſpeare.

2. Ligament that holds any thing together.

Let any one ſend his contemplation to the extremities of the univerſe, and ſee what conceivable hoops, what bond he can imagine to hold this maſs of matter in ſo cloſe a preſſure together. Locke.

3. Union; connexion.

Obſerve, in working up the walls, that no ſide of the houſe, nor any part of the walls, be brought up three feet above the other, before the next adjoining wall be wrought up to it, ſo that they may be all joined together, and make a good bond.
Mortimer's Huſbandry.

4. Chains; impriſonment; captivity.

Whom I perceived to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death, or of bonds. Acts, xxiii. 29.

5. Cement of union; cauſe of union; link of connexion.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;
O bleſſed bond of board and bed! Shakeſpeare.

Love cools, brothers divide, and the bond is cracked 'twixt ſon and father. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

6. A writing of obligation to pay a ſum, or perform a contract.

Go with me to a notary, ſeal me there
Your ſingle bond. Shakeſpeare.

What if I ne'er conſent to make you mine;
My father's promiſe ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date, they ſay, are void. Dryden.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majeſty
According to my bond, no more nor leſs. Shakeſpeare.

Take which you pleaſe, it diſſolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from gebonden, Saxon.] Captive; in a ſervile ſtate.

BO'NDAGE. n. ſ. [from bond.] Captivity; impriſonment; ſtate of reſtraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage conſiſts my glory. Sidney.

Say, gentle princeſs, would you not ſuppoſe
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?—
—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than is a ſlave in baſe ſervility. Shakeſpeare.

Our cage
We make a choir, as doth the priſon'd bird,
And ſing our bondage freely. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

He muſt reſolve by no means to be enſlaved, and brought under the bondage of obſerving oaths, which ought to vaniſh when they ſtand in competition with eating or drinking, or taking money. South.

The king, when he deſign'd you for my guard,
Reſolv'd he would not make my bondage hard. Dryden.

If ſhe has a ſtruggle for honour, ſhe is in a bondage to love; which gives the ſtory its turn that way. Pope.

BO'NDMAID. n. ſ. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman ſlave.

Good ſiſter, wrong me not, nor wrong yourſelf,
To make a bondmaid and a ſlave of me. Shakeſpeare.

BO'NDMAN. n. ſ. [from bond and man.] A man ſlave.

Amongſt the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore ſo great ado ſhould be made; the maſter to preſent his ſlave in ſome court, to take him by the hand, and not only to ſay, in the hearing of the publick magiſtrate, I will that this man become free; but, after thoſe ſolemn words uttered, to ſtrike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be ſhaved off, the magiſtrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker.

O freedom! firſt delight of human kind;
Not that which bondmen from their maſters find. Dryden.

BONDSE'RVANT. n. ſ. [from bond and ſervant.] A ſlave; a ſervant without the liberty of quitting his maſter.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be ſold unto thee, thou ſhalt not compel him to ſerve as a bondſervant. Leviticus, xxv. 39.

2. A perſon bound, or giving ſecurity for another.

BO'NDSWOMAN. n. ſ. [from bond and woman.] A woman ſlave.

My lords, the ſenators
Are ſold for ſlaves, and their wives for bondſwomen.
Ben. Johnſon's Catiline.

BONE. n. ſ. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The ſolid parts of the body of an animal are made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by ſmall tranſverſe fibres, as thoſe of the muſcles. In a fœtus they are porous, ſoft, and eaſily diſcerned. As their pores fill with a ſubſtance of their own nature, ſo they increaſe, harden, and grow cloſe to one another. They are all ſpongy, and full of little cells, or are of a conſiderable firm thickneſs, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and ſtrong membrane, called the periofteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not eaſily put out of joint. But, becauſe the middle of the bone ſhould be ſtrong, to ſuſtain its allotted weight, and reſiſt accidents, the fibres are there more cloſely compacted together, ſupporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and conſequently not ſo eaſily broken, as it muſt have been had it been ſolid and ſmaller. Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowleſs, thy blood is cold. Macbeth.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much fleſh as adheres to it.

Like Æſop's hounds, contending for the bone,

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.

Puſs had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel. L'Eſtrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no ſcruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily ſwallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A ſort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6 Bones. Dice.

But then my ſtudy was to cog the dice,
And dext'rouſly to throw the lucky fice:
To ſhun ames ace that ſwept my ſtakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they ſhould convey Falſe bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the fleſh.

BO'NELACE. n. ſ. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, ſuch as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make ſongs on now, ſhould be ſent to knit, or ſit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.

We deſtroy the ſymmetry of the human figure, and fooliſhly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childiſh gewgaw ribbands and bonelace. Spectator.

BO'NELESS. adj. [from bone.] Without bones.

I would, while it was ſmiling in my face,
Have pluckt my nipple from his boneleſs gums,
And daſht the brains out. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

To BO'NESET. v. n. [from bone and ſet.] To reſtore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg ſet in the country by one pretending to boneſetting. Wiſeman's Surgery.

BO'NESETTER. n. ſ. [from boneſet.] A chirurgeon; one who particularly profeſſes the art of reſtoring broken or luxated bones.

At preſent my deſire is only to have a good boneſetter. Denham's Sophy.

BO'NFIRE. n. ſ. [from bon, good, Fr. and fire.] A fire made for ſome publick cauſe of triumph or exultation.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away,
And bonfires make all day. Spenſer.

How came ſo many bonfires to be made in queen Mary's days? Why, ſhe had abuſed and deceived her people. South.

Full ſoon by bonfire, and by bell,
We learnt our liege was paſſing well. Gay.

BO'NGRACE. n. ſ. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead. Skinner.

I have ſeen her beſet all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke, her bongrace, and chaplet. Hakewill on Providence.

BO'NNET. n. ſ. [bonet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,
And thus far having ſtretch'd it, here be with them,
Thy knee buſſing the ſtones; for, in ſuch buſineſs,
Action is eloquence. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

They had not probably the ceremony of veiling the bonnet in their ſalutations; for, in medals, they ſtill have it on their heads. Addiſon.

BO'NNET. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the ſaliant angles of the glacis; being paliſadoed round: of late alſo uſed before the angles of baſtions, and the points of ravelins.

BO'NNET à preſtre, or prieſt's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three ſaliant angles, and two inwards. It differs from the double tenaille, becauſe its ſides, inſtead of being parallel, grow narrow at the gorge, and open wider at the front.

BO'NNETS. [In the ſea language.] Small ſails ſet on the courſes on the mizzen, mainſail, and foreſail of a ſhip, when theſe are too narrow or ſhallow to cloath the maſt, or in order to make more way in calm weather. Chambers.

BO'NNILY. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handſomely; plumply.

BO'NNINESS. n. ſ. [from bonny.] Gayety; handſomeneſs; plumpneſs.

BO'NNY. adj. [from bon, bonne, Fr. It is a word now almoſt confined to the Scottiſh dialect.]

1. Handſome; beautiful.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows,
Ev'n of the bonny beaſt he lov'd ſo well. Shakeſpeare.

Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy ſtrain,
Till bonny Suſan ſped acroſs the plain. Gay.

2. Gay; merry; frolickſome; cheerful; blithe.

Then ſigh not ſo, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny. Shakeſpeare.

3. It ſeems to be generally uſed in converſation for plump.

BONNY-CLABBER. n. ſ. A word uſed in ſome counties for ſour buttermilk.

We ſcorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;
Nor are we ſtudious to enquire,
Who votes for manours, who for hire. Swift.

BONUM MAGNUM. n. ſ. See PLUM; of which it is a ſpecies.

BO'NY. adj. [from bone.]

1. Conſiſting of bones.

At the end of this hole is a membrane, faſtened to a round bony limb, and ſtretched like the head of a drum; and therefore, by anatomiſts, called tympanum. Ray.

2. Full of bones.

BO'OBY. n. ſ. [a word of no certain etymology; Henſhaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef ridiculouſly; Skinner imagines it to be derived from bobo, fooliſh, Span. Junius finds bowbard to be an old Scottiſh word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby; but the original of bowbard is not known.] A dull, heavy, ſtupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find,
That booby Phaon only was unkind,
An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind. Prior.

Young maſter next muſt riſe to fill him wine,
And ſtarve himſelf to ſee the booby dine. King.

BOOK. n. ſ. [boc, Sax. ſuppoſed from boc, a beech; becauſe they wrote on beechen boards, as liber in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write:

See a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shakeſpeare.

Receive the ſentence of the law for ſins,
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

But in the coffin that had the books, they were found as freſh as if they had been but newly written; being written on parchment, and covered over with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Books are a ſort of dumb teachers; they cannot anſwer ſudden queſtions, or explain preſent doubts: this is properly the work of a living inſtructor. Watts.

2. A particular part of a work.

The firſt book we divide into ſections; whereof the firſt is theſe chapters paſt. Burnet's Theory.

3. The regiſter in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

This life

BREAST. n. s. [bpeoſt, Saxon.]
1. The middle part of the human body, between the neck and the belly.
2. The dugs or teats of women which contain the milk.
The substance of the breasts is composed of a great number of glands, of an oval figure, which lie in a great quantity of fat. Their excretory ducts, as they approach the nipple, join and unite together, till at last they form seven, eight, or more, small pipes, called tubuli lactiferi, which have several cross canals, by which they communicate with one another, that if any of them be stopped, the milk, which was brought to it, might not stagnate, but pass through by the other pipes, which all terminate in the extremity of the nipple. They have arteries and veins from the subclavian and intercostral. They have nerves from the vertebral pairs, and from the sixth pair of the brain. Their use is to separate the milk for the nourishment of the fœtus. The tubes, which compose the glands of the breast in maids, like a sphincter muscle, contract so closely, that no part of the blood can enter them; but when the womb grows big with with a fœtus, and compreſſes the deſcending trunk of the great artery, the blood flows in a greater quantity, and with a greater force, through the arteries of the breaſts, and forces a paſſage into their glands, which, being at firſt narrow, admits only of a thin water; but growing wider by degrees, as the womb grows bigger, the glands receive a thick ſerum, and, after birth, they run with a thick milk; becauſe that blood, which before did flow to the fœtus, and, for three or four days afterwards, by the uterus, beginning then to ſtop, does more dilate the mamillary glands. Quincy.

BU'CKSHORN PLANTAIN. n. ſ. [coronopus, Lat. from the form of the leaf.] A plant.

It agrees in flower and fruit with the plantain; but its leaves are deeply cut in on the edges; whereas the leaves of the plantain are either entire, or but ſlightly indented. The ſpecies are four; 2. Garden buckſhorn plantain, or hartſhorn, &c. The firſt ſpecies though entitled a garden plant, yet is found wild upon moſt commons, and barren heaths; where, from the poorneſs of the ſoil, it appears to be very different from the garden kind, as being little more than a fourth part ſo large. This ſpecies was formerly cultivated in gardens as a ſalad herb, but, at preſent, is little regarded, and wholly diſuſed. Miller.

BU'CKTHORN. n. ſ. [rhamnus, Lat. ſuppoſed to be ſo called from bucc, Sax. the belly.]

It hath a funnel-ſhaped flower, conſiſting of one leaf, divided toward the top into four or five ſegments; out of the flower-cup riſes the pointal, which becomes a ſoft roundiſh berry, very full of juice, incloſing four hard ſeeds. The ſpecies are, 1. Common purging buckthorn. 2. Leſſer purging buckthorn. 3. Buckthorn, with long ſpines, and a white bark of Montpelier. The firſt of theſe trees is very common in hedges; the berries of which are uſed in medicine, particularly for making a ſyrup, which was was formerly in great uſe; though, of late, other ſorts of berries have either been mixed with thoſe of the buckthorn, or wholly ſubſtituted in their place; which mixture hath ſpoiled the ſyrup, and rendered it leſs eſteemed. The buckthorn berries may be diſtinguiſhed whether they are right or not, by opening them, and obſerving the number of ſeeds in each; for theſe have commonly four. The ſecond ſort is leſs common in England. Both theſe ſorts may be propagated, by laying down their tender branches in autumn. The firſt ſort will grow to the height of eighteen or twenty feet; the ſecond ſort ſeldom riſes above eight feet high. They may alſo be propagated by ſeeds. Miller.

BU'CKWHEAT. n. ſ. [buchweitz, Germ. fagopyrum, Lat.]

The flowers grow in a ſpike, or branched from the wings of the leaves; the cup of the flower is divided into five parts, and reſembles the petals of a flower; the ſeeds are black, and three cornered. The ſpecies are. 1. Common upright buckwheat. 2. Common creeping buckwheat. The firſt is cultivated in England, and is a great improvement to dry barren lands. The ſecond grows wild, and is ſeldom cultivated. Miller.

BUD. n. ſ. [bouton, Fr.] The firſt ſhoot of a plant; a gem.

Be as thou was wont to be
See as thou waſt wont to ſee:
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath ſuch force and bleſſed power. Shakeſpeare.

Writers ſay, as the moſt forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even ſo by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blaſting in the bud,
Loſing his verdure even in the prime. Shakeſpeare.

When you the flow'rs for Chloe twine,
Why do you to her garland join
The meaneſt bud that falls from mine? Prior.

Inſects wound the tender buds, with a long hollow trunk, and depoſit an egg in the hole, with a ſharp corroding liquor, that cauſeth a ſwelling in the leaf, and cloſeth the orifice. Bentley.

To BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To put forth young ſhoots, or gems.

BUILDER. n. ſ. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.

But fore-accounting oft makes builders miſs;
They found, they felt, they had no leaſe of bliſs. Sidney.

When they, which had ſeen the beauty of the firſt temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the ſecond, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavoured, with comforts, to wipe away. Hooker.

Mark'd out for ſuch an uſe, as if 'twere meant

Her wings with lengthen'd honour let her ſpread,
And, by her greatneſs, ſhew her builder's fame. Prior.

BUILDING. n. ſ. [from build.] A fabrick; an edifice.

Thy ſumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have coſt a maſs of publick treaſury. Shakeſpeare.

View not this ſpire by meaſure giv'n
To buildings rais'd by common hands:
That fabrick riſes high as heav'n,
Whoſe baſis on devotion ſtands. Prior.

Among the great variety of ancient coins which I ſaw at Rome, I could not but take particular notice of ſuch as relate to any of the buildings or ſtatues that are ſtill extant. Addiſon.

BUILT. n. ſ. [from build.] The form; the ſtructure.

As is the built, ſo different is the fight;
Their mounting ſhot is on our ſails deſign'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a paſſage find. Dryden.

There is hardly any country, which has ſo little ſhipping as Ireland; the reaſon muſt be, the ſcarcity of timber proper for this built. Temple.

BULL HEAD. n. f. [from bull and head.]

1. A stupid fellow; a blockhead.

2. The name of a fish.

The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; he is without teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of his tail is round. Nature hath painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which swells their vents in the form of a dug. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows. Walton.

3. A little black water vermin. Phillips's World of Words.

BULL-TROUT. n. f. A kind of trout.

There is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in these southern parts. Walton.

BULL-WEED. n. f. The same with knapweed; which see.

BULL-WORT, or BISHOPS-WEED. n. f. [ammi, Latin.] An umbelliferous plant with small striated seeds; the petals of the flowers are unequal, and shaped like a heart. Its seeds are used in medicine. Miller.

BU'LLACE. n. f. A wild sour plum. See PLUM.

In October, and the beginning of November, come services, medlars, bullaces; roses cut or removed, to come late; holyoaks, and such like. Bacon.

BU'LLET. n. f. [boulet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, usually shot out of guns.

As when the devilish iron engine wrought
In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies' skill,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And ramm'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill. Spenser.

Giaffer, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the foremost of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain. Knolles.

And as the bullet, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd:
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

BU'LLION. n. f. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump; unwrought, uncoined.

The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon.

A second multitude,
With wond'rous art, found out the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion dross:
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addison.

BULLI'TION. n. f. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are, as the bullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

BU'LLOCK. n. f. [from bull.] A young bull.

Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. Shakespeare.

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock scorns
Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning horns. Cowley.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks. Temple.

BU'LLY. n. f. [Skinner derives this word from burly, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are less probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the insolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine host of the garter.—What says my bully rock? Speak scholarly and wisely. Shakespeare.

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenches, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Estrange.

'Tis so ridic'lous, but so true withal,
A bully cannot sleep without a brawl. Dryden.

A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addison.

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows cholerick, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison.

To BU'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise and menaces.

Prentices, parish clerks, and hectors meet,
He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat. King.

To BULLY. v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.

BU'LRUSH. n. f. [from bull and rush.] A large rush, such grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet knotty, confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baskets of bulrushes, was my wont. Spenser.

All my praises are but as a bulrush cast upon a stream; they are born up by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending oziers crown'd;
The knotty bulrush next in order stood,
And all within of reeds a trembling wood. Dryden.

BULWARK. n. s. [bolwerck, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness.]

1. A fortification; a citadel.

But him the squire made quickly to retreat,
Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,
And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Who oft repair
Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax.

Taking away needless bulwarks, divers were demolished upon the sea coasts. Hayward.

We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addison.

Our naval strength is a general bulwark to the British nation. Addison's Freeholder, N° 42.

2. A security.

Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakesp.

To BU'LWARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast,
Preserves the beauteous youth from being seen. Addison.

BUM. n. s. [bomme, Dutch.]

1. The buttocks; the part on which we sit.

The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for threefoot stool mistaketh me,
Then slip I from her bum, down topples she. Shakespeare.

This said, he gently rais'd the knight,
And set him on his bum upright. Hudibras.

From dusty shops neglected authors come,
Martyrs of pies, and relicks of the bum. Dryden.

The learned Sydenham does not doubt,
But profound thought will bring the gout;
And that with bum on couch we lie,
Because our reason's soar'd too high. W——n.

2. It is used, in composition, for any thing mean or low, as bumbailiff.

BUMBA'ILIFF. n. s. [from bum and bailiff.] A bailiff of the meanest kind; one that is employed in arrests.

Go, Sir Andrew, scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff. Shakespeare.

BU'MBARD. n. s. [wrong written for bombard; which see.] A great gun; a great barrel.

Yond same black cloud, yond huge one looks
Like a foul bumbard, that would shed his liquor.
Shakespeare's Tempest.

BU'MBAST. n. s. [falsely written for bombast; the etymology of which I am now very doubtful of; bombast and bombasine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from bom, a tree, and sein, silk; the silk or cotton of a tree.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.

The usual bumbast of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; stuffing.

We have received your letters full of love,
And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bumbast, and as lining to the time. Shakespeare.

BU'MP. n. s. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakespeare.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise. Dryden.

To BU'MP. v. a. [from bombus, Lat.] To make a loud noise, or bomb. [See BOMB.] It is applied, I think, only to the bittern.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head,
And as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she said —— Dryden.

BU'MPER. n. s. [from bump.] A cup filled till the liquour swells over the brims.

Places his delight
All day in playing bumpers, and at night
Reels to the bawds. Dryden's Juvenal.

BU'MPKIN. n. s. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henshaw derives it from pumpkin, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh. Bump is used amongst us for a knob, or lump; may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead.] An awkward heavy rustick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never seen nor heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition. L'Estrange's Fables.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care,
Can never dance three steps with a becoming air. Dryden.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears,
The country bumpkin the same livery wears. Dryden.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumpkins and clowns, if they pleased. Locke.

BU'MPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the rustick wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells. Clarissa.

BUNCH. n. s. [bunche, Danish, the crags of the mountains.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.

They will carry their treasures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that shall not profit them. Isa. xxx. 6.

He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown hard with little round balls or bunches, like hard boiled eggs. Boyle.

2. A cluster; many of the same kind growing together.

Vines, with clust'ring bunches growing. Shakespeare.

Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the distribution of the lights and shadows, than his observation drawn from a bunch of grapes. Dryden.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine,
And the last blessings of the year are thine. Dryden.

3. A number of things tied together.

And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore. Fairy Queen.

All? I know not what ye call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish. Shakespeare.

Ancient Janus, with his double face,
And bunch of keys, the porter of the place. Dryden.

The mother's bunch of keys, or any thing they cannot hurt themselves with, serves to divert little children. Locke.

4. Any thing bound into a knot.

Upon the top of all his lofty crest,
A bunch of hairs discover'd diversly,
With sprinkled pearl and gold full richly drest. Spenser.

To BUNCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out in a bunch; to grow out in protuberances.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, bunching out into a large round knob at one end. Woodward on Fossils.

BUNCHBA'CKED. adj. [from bunch and back.] Having bunches on the back.

The day shall come, that thou shalt wish for me,
To help thee curse this pois'nous bunchback'd toad. Shakesp.

BU'NCHINESS. n. s. [from bunchy.] The quality of being bunchy, or growing in bunches.

BU'NCHY. adj. [from bunch.] Growing into bunches; knotty.

He is more especially distinguished from other birds, by his bunchy tail, and the shortness of his legs. Grew.

BU'NDLE. n. s. [bỳndle, Sax. from bỳnd.]

1. A number of things bound together

As to the bundles of petitions in parliament, they were, for the most part, petition of private persons. Hale.

Try, lads, can you this bundle break;
Then bids the youngest of the six
Take up a well-bound heap of sticks. Swift.

In the north, they bind them up in small bundles, and make small ricks of them. Mortimer.

2. A roll; any thing rolled up cylindrically.

She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm; but finding herself overloaden, she dropped the good man, and brought away the bundle Spectator.

To BU'NDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together: with up.

We ought to put things together, as well as we can, doctrinæ causa; but, after all, several things will not be bundled up together, under our terms and ways of speaking. Locke.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frize;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

BUNG. n. s. [bing, Welch.] A stopple for a barrel.

After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung stick, or plug. Mortimer.

To BUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up.

BU'NGHOLE. n. s. [from bung and hole.] The hole at which the barrel is filled, and which is afterward stopped up.

Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bunghole. Shakespeare.

To BUNGLE. v. n. [See BUNGLER.] To perform clumsily.

When men want light,
They make but bungling work. Dryden.

Letters to me are not seldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands. Swift.

To BU'NGLE. v. a. To botch; to manage clumsily; to conduct awkwardly.

Other devils, that suggest by-treasons
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with forms being fetcht
From glist'ring semblances of piety. Shakespeare.

They

They make lame miſchief, though they mean it well:
Their int'reſt is not finely drawn, and hid,
But ſeams are coarſely bungled up, and ſeen. Dryden.

BU'NGLE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardneſs; an inaccuracy; a clumſy performance.

Errours and bungles are committed, when the matter is inapt or contumacious. Ray on the Creation.

BU'NGLER. n. ſ. [bungler, Welch; q. bôn y glér, i. e. the laſt or loweſt of the profeſſion Davies.] A bad workman; a clumſy performer; a man without ſkill.

Painters, at the firſt, were ſuch bunglers, and ſo rude, that, when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwiſe the beholder knew not what to make of it. Peacham on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;
To draw true beauty ſhews a maſter's hand. Dryden.

A bungler thus, who ſcarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the pannel ſplit. Swift.

BU'NGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumſily; awkwardly.

To denominate them monſters, they muſt have had ſome ſyſtem of parts, compounded of ſolids and fluids, that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar functions. Bentley.

BUNN. n. ſ. [bunelo, Span.] A kind of ſweet bread.

Thy ſongs are ſweeter to mine ear,
Than to the thirſty cattle rivers clear;
Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth,
Or bunns and ſugar to the damſel's tooth. Gay's Paſtorals.

BUNT. n. ſ. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from bent.] A ſwelling part; an increaſing cavity.

The wear is a frith, reaching ſlopewiſe through the ooze, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod, with an eye-hook, where the fiſh entering, upon the coming back with the ebb, are ſtopped from iſſuing out again, forſaken by the water, and left dry on the ooze. Carew.

To BUNT. v. n. [from the noun.] To ſwell out, as the ſail bunts out.

BU'NTER. n. ſ. A cant word for a woman who picks up rags about the ſtreet; and uſed, by way of contempt, for any low vulgar woman.

Shakeſpeare's All's well that ends well.

BUOY. n. ſ. [bouë, or boye, Fr. boya, Span.] A piece of cork or wood floating on the water, tied to a weight at the bottom.

The fiſhermen, that walk upon the beach,
Apear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark
Diminiſh'd to her cock; her cock a buoy,
Almoſt too ſmall for ſight. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Like buoys, that never ſink into the flood,
On learning's ſurface we but lie and nod. Pope's Dunciad.

To BUOY. v. a. [from the noun. The u is mute in both.] To keep afloat; to bear up by ſpecific lightneſs.

All art is uſed to ſink epiſcopacy, and launch preſbytery in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant. K. Charles.

The water which riſes out of the abyſs, for the ſupply of ſprings and rivers, would not have ſtopped at the ſurface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmoſphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its aſcent, and buoy it up. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

To BUOY. v. n. To float.

Riſing merit will buoy up at laſt. Pope's Eſſay on Crit.

BUO'YANCY. n. ſ. [from boyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it.
Derham's Phyſico-theology.

BUO'YANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light; that which will not ſink.

10. If it were not for this; if this were not.

Believe me, I had rather have loſt my purſe
Full of cruzades. And, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no ſuch baſeneſs,
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill-thinking. Shakeſpeare.

I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which but thou haſt already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee. Shakeſpeare.

11. However; howbeit.

I do not doubt but I have been to blame;
But, to purſue the end for which I came,
Unite your ſubjects firſt, then let us go,
And pour their common rage upon the foe. Dryden.

12. It is uſed after no doubt, no queſtion, and ſuch words, and ſignifies the ſame with that. It ſometimes is joined with that.

BY, in compoſition, implies ſomething out of the direct way; and, conſequently, ſome obſcurity, as a by-road; ſomething irregular, as a by-end; or ſomething collateral, as a by-concernment; or private, as a by-law. This compoſition is uſed at pleaſure, and will be underſtood by the examples following.

BY-COFFEEHOUSE. n. ſ. A coffeehouſe in an obſcure place.

I afterwards entered a by-coffeehouſe, that ſtood at the upper end of a narrow lane, where I met with a nonjuror. Addiſon, Spectator.

BY-CONCERNMENT. n. ſ. An affair which is not the main buſineſs.

Our plays, beſides the main deſign, have under-plots, or by-concernments, or leſs conſiderable perſons and intrigues, which are carried on with the motion of the main plot. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

BY-DEPENDENCE. n. ſ. An appendage; ſomething accidentally depending on another.

Theſe,
And your three motives to the battle, with
I know not how much more, ſhould be demanded;
And all the other by-dependences,
From chance to chance. Shakeſpeare.

BY-DESIGN. n. ſ. An incidental purpoſe.

And if ſhe miſs the mouſe-trap lines,
They'll ſerve ſerve for other by-deſigns,
And make an artiſt underſtand,
To copy out her ſeal or hand;
Or find void places in the paper,
To ſteal in ſomething to entrap her. Hudibras.

BY-END. n. ſ. Private intereſt; ſecret advantage.

All people that worſhip for fear, profit, or ſome other by-end, fall within the intendment of this fable. L'Eſtrange.

BY-GONE. adj. [a Scotch word.] Paſt.

Tell him, you're ſure
All in Bohemia's well: this ſatisfaction
The by-gone day proclaim'd. Shakeſpeare.

As we have a conceit of motion coming, as well as by-gone; ſo have we of time, which dependeth thereupon. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra.

BY-INTEREST. n. ſ. Intereſt diſtinct from that of the publick.

Various factions and parties, all aiming at by-intereſt, without any ſincere regard to the publick good. Atterbury.

BY-LAW. n. ſ.

By-laws are orders made in court-leets, or court-barons, by common aſſent, for the good of thoſe that make them, farther than the publick law binds. Cowel.

There was alſo a law, to reſtrain the by-laws and ordinances of corporations. Bacon.

In the beginning of this record is inſerted the law or inſtitution; to which are added two by-laws, as a comment upon the general law. Addiſon.

BY-MATTER. n. ſ. Something incidental.

I knew one, that, when he wrote a letter, he would put that which was moſt material into the poſtſcript, as if it had been a by-matter. Bacon.

BY-NAME. n. ſ. A nickname; name of reproach, or accidental appellation.

Robert, eldeſt ſon to the Conquerour, uſed ſhort hoſe, and thereupon was by-named Court-hoſe, and ſhewed firſt the uſe of them to the Engliſh. Camden.

BY-PAST. adj. Paſt; a term of the Scotch dialect.

Wars, peſtilences, and diſeaſes, have not been fewer for theſe three hundred years by-paſt, than ever they have been ſince we have had records. Cheyne.

BY-PATH. n. ſ. A private or obſcure path.

Heav'n knows, my ſon,
By what by-paths, and indirect crooked ways,
I got this crown. Shakeſpeare.

BY-RESPECT. n. ſ. Private end or view.

It may be, that ſome, upon by-reſpects, find ſomewhat friendly uſage in uſance, at ſome of their hands. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The archbiſhops and biſhops, next under the king, have the government of the church: be not you the mean to prefer any to thoſe places, for any by-reſpects, but only for their learning, gravity, and worth. Bacon.

Auguſtus, who was not altogether ſo good as he was wiſe, had ſome by-reſpects in the enacting of this law; for to do any thing for nothing, was not his maxim. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

BY-ROAD. n. ſ. An obſcure unfrequented path.

Through ſlipp'ry by-roads, dark and deep,
They often climb, and often creep. Swift.

BY-ROOM. n. ſ. A private room within another.

I pr'ythee, do thou ſtand in ſome by-room, while I queſtion my puny drawer to what end he gave the ſugar. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

BY-SPEECH. n. ſ. An incidental or caſual ſpeech, not directly relating to the point.

When they come to allege what word and what law they meant, their common ordinary practice is to quote by-ſpeeches, in ſome hiſtorical narration or other, and to uſe them as if they were written in moſt exact form of law. Hooker.

BY-STANDER. n. ſ. A looker on; one unconcerned.

She broke her feathers againſt the frame of the picture, and, falling to the ground upon it, was taken up by the by-ſtanders. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

The by-ſtanders aſked him, why he ran away, his bread being weight? That was more than I knew, ſays he. Locke.

BY-STREET. n. ſ. An obſcure ſtreet.

The broker here his ſpacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow ſit jealouſies and cares;
Bent on ſome mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He ſeeks by-ſtreets, and ſaves th' expenſive coach.
Gay's Trivia.

BY-VIEW. n. ſ. Private ſelf-intereſted purpoſe.

No by-views of his own ſhall miſlead him. Atterbury.

BY-WALK. n. ſ. A private walk; not the main road.

All which he moves afterwards in by-walks, or under-plots, as diverſions to the main deſign, leſt it ſhould grow tedious; though they are ſtill naturally joined. Dryden.

The chief avenue ought to be the moſt ample and noble; but there ſhould be by-walks, to retire into ſometimes, for eaſe and refreſhment. Broome's Notes on the Odyſſey.

BY-WAY. n. ſ. A private and obſcure way.

Night ſtealths are commonly driven in by-ways, and by blind fords, unuſed of any but ſuch like. Spenſer.

Other by-ways he himſelf betook,
Where never foot of living wight did tread.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen.

Wholly abſtain, or wed: thy beauteous Lord
Allows thee choice of paths; take no by-ways,
But gladly welcome what he doth afford;
Not grudging that thy luſt hath bounds and ſtays. Herbert.

A ſervant, or a favourite, if he be in want, and no other apparent cauſe of eſteem, is commonly thought but a by-way to cloſe corruption. Bacon's Eſſays.

This is wonderfully diverting to the underſtanding, thus to receive a precept that enters, as it were, through a by-way, and to apprehend an idea that draws a whole train after it. Addiſon's Eſſay on the Georgicks.

BY-WEST. Weſtward; to the weſt of.

Whereupon grew that by-word, uſed by the Iriſh, that they dwelt by-weſt the law, which dwelt beyond the river of the Barrow. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

BY-WORD. n. ſ. A ſaying; a proverb.

Duke of York, be king;
And baſhful Henry be depoſed; whoſe cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

I knew a wiſe man, that had it for a by-word, when he ſaw men haſten to a concluſion, Stay a little, that we may make an end the ſooner. Bacon's Eſſays.

We are become a by-word among the nations for our ridiculous feuds and animoſities. Addiſon's Freeholder.

It will be his lot often, to look ſingular, in looſe and licentious times, and to become a by-word and a reproach, on that account, among the men of wit and pleaſure. Atterbury.

BY'ASS. n. ſ. See BIAS.

Every inordinate luſt is a falſe byaſs upon men's underſtandings, which naturally draws towards atheiſm. Tillotſon.

Bramhall againſt Hobbes.

CA'BBAGE. n. ſ. [cabus, Fr. braſſica, Lat.] A plant.

The leaves are large, fleſhy, and of a glaucous colour; the flowers conſiſt of four leaves, which are ſucceeded by long taper pods, containing ſeveral round acrid ſeeds. The ſpecies are, 1. The common white cabbage. 2. The red cabbage. 3. The Ruſſian cabbage. 4. The flat-ſided cabbage. 5. The ſugar loaf cabbage. 6. The early Batterſea cabbage. 7. The white Savoy cabbage. 8. The green Savoy cabbage. 9. The boorcole. 10. The green broccoli. 11. The Italian broccoli. 12. The turnep-rooted cabbage. 13. The cauliflower. 14. The turnep cabbage. 15. Curled colewort. 16. The muſk cabbage. 17. Branching tree cabbage, from the ſea coaſt. 18. Brown broccoli. 19. Common colewort. 20. Perennial Alpine colewort. 21. Perfoliated wild cabbage, with a white flower. 22. Perfoliated cabbage, with a purple flower. The common white, red, flat, and long-ſided cabbages, are chiefly cultivated for winter uſe; the ſeeds of which muſt be ſown in the middle of March, in beds of good freſh earth. The Ruſſian cabbage was formerly in much greater eſteem than at preſent, and is rarely brought to the market. The early Batterſea and ſugar-loaf cabbages, are called Michaelmas cabbages; the ſeaſon for ſowing them is in the middle of July, in an open ſpot of ground. The Savoy cabbages are propagated for winter uſe, as being generally eſteemed the better, when pinched by froſt. The boorcole is never eaten till the froſt has rendered it tender. The turnep cabbage was formerly more cultivated in England than at preſent; and ſome eſteem this kind for ſoups, but it is generally too ſtrong, and ſeldom good, except in hard winters. The curled colewort is more generally eſteemed, and is fit for uſe after Chriſtmas, and continues good until April. The muſk cabbage has, through negligence, been almoſt loſt in England, though, for eating, it is one of the beſt kinds we have; for it is always looſer, and the leaves more criſp and tender, and has a moſt agreeable muſky ſcent when cut. It will be fit for uſe in October, November, and December. The branching ſea cabbage is found wild in England, and on the ſea coaſt, and is ſometimes gathered by the poor inhabitants in the ſpring, and eaten; but it is apt to be ſtrong and bitter. The brown broccoli is by many eſteemed, though it does not deſerve a place in the kitchen garden, where the Roman broccoli can be obtained, which is much ſweeter, and will continue longer in ſeaſon. The Roman broccoli has large heads, which appear in the center of the plants like cluſters of buds. The heads ſhould be cut before they run up to ſeed, with about four or five inches of the ſtems; the ſkin of theſe ſtems ſhould be ſtripped off, before they are boiled; they will eat very tender, and little inferiour to aſparagus. The common colewort is now almoſt loſt near London, where their markets are uſually ſupplied with cabbage or Savoy plants inſtead of them; which, being tenderer and more delicate, are better worth cultivating. The perennial Alpine colewort is alſo little cultivated at preſent. The other two ſorts of wild cabbage are varieties fit for a botanick garden, but are plants of no uſe. The cauliflowers have, of late years, been ſo far improved in England, as to exceed, in goodneſs and magnitude, what are produced in moſt parts of Europe; and, by the ſkill of the gardners, are continued for ſeveral months together; but the moſt common ſeaſon for them is in May, June, and July. Miller.

Cole, cabbage, and coleworts, which are ſoft and demulcent, without any acidity; the jelly, or juice, of red cabbage, baked in an oven, and mixed with honey, is an excellent pectoral. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To CA'BBAGE. v. a. [a cant word among taylors.] To ſteal in cutting clothes.

Your taylor, inſtead of ſhreads, 'ca'bages whole yards of cloth. Arbuthnot's Hiſtory of J. Bull.

CA'BBAGE-TREE. n. ſ. A ſpecies of palm-tree; which ſee.

It is very common in the Caribee iſlands, where it grows to a prodigious height. The leaves of this tree envelope each other, ſo that thoſe which are incloſed, being deprived of the air, are blanched; which is the part the inhabitants cut for plaits for hats, &c. and the genuine, or young ſhoots, are pickled, and ſent into England by the name of cabbage; but whenever this part is cut out, the trees are deſtroyed; nor do they riſe again from the old roots; ſo that there are very few trees left remaining near plantations, except for ornament; for their ſtems being exceeding ſtraight, and their leaves being produced very regularly at top, will afford a moſt beautiful proſpect; for which reaſon, the planters generally ſpare two or three of them near their habitations. Miller.

CA'BBAGE-WORM. n. ſ. An inſect.

CAB'IN. n. ſ. [cabane, Fr. chabin, Welch, a cottage]

1. A ſmall room.

So long in ſecret ca'in there he held
Her captive to his ſenſual deſire,
Till that with timely fruit her belly ſwell'd,
And bore a boy unto a ſavage ſire. Fairy Queen.

2. A ſmall chamber in a ſhip.

Give thanks you have lived ſo long, and make yourſelf ready, in your ca.in, for the miſchance of the hour, if it ſo happen. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

Men may not expect the uſe of many cabins, and ſafety at once, in the ſea ſervice. Raleigh.

The cheſsboard, we ſay, is in the ſame place it was, if it remain in the ſame part of the ca.in, though, perhaps, the ſhip it is in, ſails all the while. Locke.

3. A cottage, or ſmall houſe.

Come from marble bow'rs, many times the gay harbour of anguiſh,
Unto a ſilly cabin, though weak, yet ſtronger againſt woes. Sidney.

Neither ſhould that odious cuſtom be allowed, of flaying off the green ſurface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches. Swift.

4. A tent.

Some of green boughs their ſlender cabins frame,
Some lodged were Tortoſa's ſtreets about. Fairfax.

To CA'BIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To live in a cabin.

I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and ſuck the goat,
And cabin in a cave. Shakeſpeare.

To CA'BIN. v. a. To confine in a cabin.

Fleance is 'ſcap'd:
Then comes my fit again; I had elſe been perfect;
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock;
As broad and gen'ral as the caſing air;
But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,
To ſaucy doubts and fears. Shakeſpeare.

CA'BINED. adj. [from cabin.] Belonging to a cabin.

The nice morn, on the Indian ſteep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.

CA'BINET. n. ſ. [cabinet, Fr.]

1. A ſet of boxes or drawers for curioſities; a private box.

At both corners of the farther ſide, by way of return, let there be two delicate or rich cabinets, daintily paved, rich hanged, glazed with cryſtaline glaſs, and a rich cupola in the midſt, and all other elegancy that may be thought on. Bacon.

Who ſees a ſoul in ſuch a body ſet,
Might love the treaſure for the cabinet. Ben. Johnſon.

In vain the workman ſhew'd his wit,
With rings and hinges counterfeit,
To make it ſeem, in this diſguiſe,
A cabinet to vulgar eyes. Swift.

2. Any place in which things of value are hidden.

Thy breaſt hath ever been the cabinet,
Where I have lock'd my ſecrets. Denham.

We cannot diſcourſe of the ſecret, but by deſcribing our duty; but ſo much duty muſt needs open a cabinet of myſteries. Taylor.

3. A private room in which conſultations are held.

You began in the cabinet what you afterwards practiſed in the camp. Dryden.

4. In Spenſer it ſeems to ſignify a hut, or houſe.

Hearken awhile in thy green cabinet,
The lawrel ſong of careful Colinet. Paſtorals.

CA'BINET-COUNCIL. n. ſ. A council held in a private manner, with unuſual privacy and confidence.

The doctrine of Italy, and practice of France, in ſome kings times, hath introduced cabinet-councils. Bacon.

From the higheſt to the loweſt it is univerſally read; from the cabinet-council to the nurſery. Gay.

CA'BINET-MAKER. n. ſ. [from cabinet and make.] One that makes ſmall nice work in wood.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs; ſo that they would be of great uſe for the cabinet-makers, as well as the turners, and others. Mortimer.

CA'BLE. n. ſ. [cabl, Welch; cabel, Dutch.] The great rope of a ſhip to which the anchor is faſtened.

What though the maſt be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding anchor loſt,
And half our ſailors ſwallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot ſtill? Shakeſpeare.

True it is, that the length of the cable is the life of the ſhip in all extremities; and the reaſon is, becauſe it makes ſo many bendings and waves, as the ſhip, riding at that length, is not able to ſtretch it; and nothing breaks that is not ſtretched. Raleigh's Eſſays.

The cables crack, the ſailors fearful cries
Aſcend; and ſable night involves the ſkies. Dryden.

CA'BURNS. n. ſ. Small ropes uſed in ſhips. Dict.

CA'CAO. See CHOCOLATENUT.

CACHE'CTICAL. } adj. [from cachexy.] Having an ill habit of CACHE'CTICK. } body; ſhewing an ill habit.

The crude chyle ſwims in the blood, and appears as milk in the blood, let out of ſome perſons who are generally cachectick. Flojer.

CACHE'XY. n. ſ. [καχεξία] A general word to expreſs a great variety of ſymptoms; moſt commonly it denotes ſuch a diſtemperature of the humours, as hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions, proceeding from weakneſs of the fibres, and an abuſe of the non-naturals, and often from ſevere acute diſtempers. Arbuthnot.

CACHINNA'TION. n. ſ. [cachinnatio, Lat.] A loud laughter. D.

CA'CKEREL. n. ſ. A fiſh, ſaid to make thoſe who eat it laxative.

To CACKLE. v. n. [kae.kelen, Dutch.]

1. To make a noiſe as a gooſe.

The nightingale, if ſhe ſhould ſing by day,
When every gooſe is cackling, would be thought
No better a muſician than the wren. Shakeſpeare.

Gooſe, if I had you upon Sarum plain,
I'd drive thee cackling home to Camelot. Shakeſpeare.

Or rob the Roman geeſe of all their glories,
And ſave the ſtate, by cackling to the tories. Pope.

2. Sometimes it is uſed for the noiſe of a hen.

Now to my ſtory I return again:
The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,
This woful cackling cry, with horrour heard,
Of thoſe diſtracted damſels in the yard. Dryden.

3. To laugh; to giggle.

Then Nic. grinned, cackled, and laughed, till he was like to kill himſelf, and ſeemed to be ſo pleaſed, that he fell a friſking and dancing about the room. Arbuthnot.

CA'CKLE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] The voice of a gooſe or fowl.

The ſilver gooſe before the ſhining gate
There flew, and, by her cackle, ſav'd the ſtate. Dryden.

2. A teltale; a tatler.

CACOCHY'MICAL. } adj. [from cacochymy.] Having the hu-
CACOCHY'MICK. } mours corrupted.

It will prove very advantageous, if only cacochymick, to clarify his blood with a laxative. Harvey.

If the body be cacochymical, the tumours are apt to degenerate into very venomous and malignant abſceſſes. Wiſeman.

The ancient writers diſtinguiſhed putrid fevers, by putrefaction of blood, choler, melancholy, and phlegm; and this is to be explained by an effervеſcence happening in a particular cacochymical blood. Flojer.

CACOCHY'MY. n. ſ. [καχοχυμία.] A depravation of the humours from a ſound ſtate, to what the phyſicians call by a general name of a cacochymy. Spots, and diſcolorations of the ſkin, are ſigns of weak fibres; for the lateral veſſels, which lie out of the road of circulation, let groſs humours paſs, which could not, if the veſſels had their due degree of ſtricture. Arbuthnot.

Strong beer, a liquor that attributes the better half of its ill qualities to the hops, conſiſting of an acrimonious fiery nature, ſets the blood, upon the leaſt cacochymy, into an orgaſmus, by an ill ferment. Harvey.

CACOPHONY. n. ſ. [καχοφωνία.] A bad ſound of words.

To CACU'MINATE. v. a. [cacumino, Lat.] To make ſharp or pyramidal. Dict.

CADA'VEROUS. adj. [cadaver, Lat.] Having the appearance of a dead carcaſs; having the qualities of a dead carcaſs.

In vain do they ſcruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, for fear of any outward pollution, whoſe temper pollutes themſelves. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The urine, long detained in the bladder, as well as glaſs, will grow red, fœtid, cadaverous and alkaline. The caſe is the ſame with the ſtagnant waters of hydropical perſons. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CA'DDIS. n. ſ.

1. A kind of tape or ribbon.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, caddiſes, cambricks, lawns; why, he ſings them over as if they were gods and goddeſſes. Shakeſpeare.

2. A kind of worm or grub found in a caſe of ſtraw.

He eſpecially loves the mayfly, which is bred of the codworm, or caddis; and theſe make the trout bold and luſty. Walton's Angler.

CADE. n. ſ. [It is deduced, by Skinner, from cadeler, Fr. an old word, which ſignifies to breed up tenderly.] Tame; ſoft; delicate; as a cade lamb, a lamb bred at home.

To CADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To breed up in ſoftneſs.

CADE. n. ſ. [cadus, Lat.] A barrel.

We John Cade, ſo termed of our ſuppoſed father—or rather of ſtealing a cade of herrings. Shakeſpeare.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells
Of cloſe preſs'd huſks is freed, thou muſt refrain
Thy thirſty ſoul; let none perſuade to broach
Thy thick, unwholſome, undigeſted cades. Philips.

CADE-WORM. n. ſ. The ſame with caddis.

CA'DENCE. } n. ſ. [cadence, Fr.]
CA'DENCY. }

1. Fall; ſtate of ſinking; decline.

Now was the ſun in weſtern cadence low
From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hours
To fan the earth, now wak'd. Milton.

2. The fall of the voice.

The ſliding, in the cloſe or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetorick, which they call præter expectatum; for there is a pleaſure even in being deceived. Bacon.

There be words not made with lungs,
Sententious ſhow'rs! O! let them fall,
Their cadence is rhetorical. Craſhaw.

3. The flow of verſes, or periods.

The words, the verſification, and all the other elegancies of ſound, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, perform exactly the ſame office both in dramatick and epick poetry. Dryden.

The cadency of one line muſt be a rule to that of the next; as the ſound of the former muſt ſlide gently into that which follows. Dryden.

4. The tone or ſound.

Hollow rocks retain
The ſound of bluſt'ring winds, which all night long

Had rous'd the ſea, now with horſe cadence lull
Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd. Paradiſe Loſt.

He hath a confuſed remembrance of words ſince he left the univerſity; he hath loſt half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence. Swift.

5. In horſemanſhip.

Cadence is an equal meaſure or proportion, which a horſe obſerves in all his motions, when he is thoroughly managed. Farrier's Dict.

CAGE. n. ſ. [cage, Fr. from cavea, Lat.]

1. An incloſure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.

See whether a cage can pleaſe a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of ruſhes, I am ſure, you are not a priſoner. Shakeſp. As you like it.

Though ſlaves, like birds that ſing not in a cage,
They loſt their genius, and poetick rage;
Homers again and Pindars may be found,
And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Waller.

And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And ſinging birds in ſilver cages hung;
And ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
Were ſorted well, with lumps of amber laid between.
Dryden's Fables.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment, a beaſt, bird, or fiſh, by the cage, or court-yard, or ciſtern, wherein it was kept. Watts.

The reaſon why ſo few marriages are happy, is, becauſe young ladies ſpend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.

2. A place for wild beaſts, incloſed with paliſadoes.
3. A priſon for petty malefactors.

To CAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To incloſe in a cage.

He ſwoln, and pamper'd with high fare,
Sits down, and ſnorts, cag'd in his baſket-chair. Donne.

CA'IMAN. n. ſ. The American name of a crocodile.

To CAJOLE. v. a. [cageoller, Fr.] To flatter; to ſooth; to coax: a low word.

Thought he, 'tis no mean part of civil
State-prudence, to cajole the devil. Hudibras.

The one affronts him, while the other cajoles and pities him; takes up his quarrel, ſhakes his head at it, claſps his hand upon his breaſt, and then proteſts and proteſts. L'Eſtrange.

Ἡμισυ τῆς ἀρετῆς ἀποαίνυται εὐρὺ ἄνακτα. Homer.

A ſlave and a ſcoundrel are ſignified by the ſame words in many languages.] A mean villain; a deſpicable knave.

Vile caitiff, vaſſal of dread and deſpair,
Unworty of the common breathed air;
Why liveſt thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And doſt not unto death thyſelf prepare. Spenſer.

'Tis not impoſſible
But one, the wicked'ſt caitiff on the ground,
May ſeem as ſhy, as grave, as juſt, as abſolute,
As Angelo. Shakeſpeare.

The wretched caitiff, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his ſtory to himſelf. Hudibras.

CAKE. n. ſ. [cuch, Teutonick.]

1. A kind of delicate bread.

You muſt be ſeeing chriſtnings? do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude raſcals? Shakeſpeare.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the reſt,
Out of hope of all, but my ſhare of the feaſt.
Shakeſp. Taming of the Shrew.

The diſmal day was come, the prieſts prepare
Their leaven'd cakes, and fillets for my hair. Dryden.

2. Any thing of a form rather flat than high; by which it is ſometimes diſtinguiſhed from a loaf.

There is a cake that groweth upon the ſide of a dead tree, that hath gotten no name, but it is large and of a cheſnut colour, and hard and pithy. Bacon.

Then when the fleecy ſkies new cloath the wood,
And cakes of ruſtling ice come rolling down the flood.
Dryden's Virgil.

To CAKE. v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it ſunk very leiſurely, had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it. Addiſon.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horſes in the night,
And cakes the elflocks in foul ſluttiſh hairs,
Which once entangl'd much misfortune bodes. Shakeſpeare.

He rins'd the wound,
And waſh'd away the ſtrings and clotted blood,
That cak'd within. Addiſon.

CALABA'SH Tree.

It hath a flower conſiſting of one leaf, divided at the brim into ſeveral parts; from whoſe cup riſes the pointal, in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleſhy fruit, having an hard ſhell. They riſe to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the Weſt-Indies, where they grow naturally in woods, and the ſavannas. The ſhells are uſed by the negroes for cups, as alſo for making inſtruments of muſick, by making a hole in the ſhell, and putting in ſmall ſtones, with which they make a ſort of rattle. Miller.

CALAMA'NCO. n. ſ. [a word derived, probably by ſome accident, from calamancus, Lat. which, in the middle ages, ſignified a hat.] A kind of woollen ſtuff.

2. Full of miſery; diſtreſsful; applied to external circumſtances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the laſt year, you may read in my diſcourſe of the plague. Harvey on Conſumptions.

Strict neceſſity
Subdues me, and calamitous conſtraint!
Leſt on my head both ſin and puniſhment,
However inſupportable, be all
Devolv'd. Milton.

Much rather I ſhall chuſe
To live the pooreſt in my tribe, than richeſt,

In this ſad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppreſſor would have even revived them. South.

CALA'MITOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from calamitous.] Miſery; diſtreſs.

CALA'MITY. n. ſ. [calamitas, Lat.] Misfortune; cauſe of miſery; diſtreſs.

Another ill accident is drought, and the ſpindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common, inſomuch as the word calamity was firſt derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the ſtalk. Bacon.

Which infinite calamity ſhall cauſe
To human life, and houſhold peace confound. Milton.

From abroad fhore, in fafety let her hear
Foreign calamity, and diftant war;
Of which, great heav'n, let her no portion bear. Prior.

CA'LAMUS. n. f. [Lat.] A fort of reed or fweet fcented wood, mentioned in fcripture with the other ingredients of the facred perfumes. It is a knotty root, reddifh without, and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies. The prophets fpeak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. Thefe fweet reeds have no fmell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their fmell is perceived upon entering the marfhes. Calmet.

Take thou alfo unto thee principal fpices of pure myrrh, of fweet cinnamon, and of fweet calamus. Exodus.

CALASH. n. f. [caleche, Fr.] A fmall carriage of pleafure.

Calcedonius is of the agat kind, and of a mifty grey, clouded with blue, or with purple. Woodward.

To CA'LCINATE. See To CALCINE.

CALCINATION. n. f. [from calcine; calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fufion; for when fufion is longer continued, not only the more fubtile particles of the body itfelf fly off, but the particles of fire likewife infinuate themfelves in fuch multitudes, and are fo blended through its whole fubftance, that the fluidity, firft caufed by the fire, can no longer fubfift. From this union arifes a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is eafily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers refidences of bodies are wont to be thrown away, as foon as the diftillation or calcination of the body that yielded them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by art into a fubtile powder. Brown's Vulgar Err.

CALCI'NATORY. n. f. [from calcinate.] A veffel ufed in calcination.

To CALCI'NE. v. a. [calciner, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable fubftance. See CALCINATION.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath thefe degrees; firft, it indurateth, then maketh fragile, and, laftly, it doth calcine. Bacon.

The folids feem to be earth, bound together with fome oil; for if a bone be calcined, fo as the leaft force will crumble it, being immerfed in oil, it will grow firm again.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To burn up.

Firy difputes that union have calcin'd,
Almoft as many minds as men we find. Denham.

To CALCI'NE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This cryftal is a pellucid fiffile ftone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without lofing its tranfparency, and, in a very ftrong heat, calcining without fufion.
Newton's Opticks.

To CA'LCULATE. v. a. [calculer, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little ftone or bead, ufed in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon.

2. To compute the fituation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me, that by water I fhould die. Shakefpeare.
Why all thefe fires, why all thefe gliding ghofts,
Why old men fools, and children calculate;
Why all thofe things change from their ordinance?
Shakefp. Julius Cæfar.

Who were there then in the world, to obferve the births of thofe firft men, and calculate their nativities, as they fprawled out of ditches? Bentley.

3. To adjuft; to project for any certain end.

The reafonablenefs of religion clearly appears, as it tends fo directly to the happinefs of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotfon.

CALCULATION. n. f. [from calculate.]

1. A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering.

Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation into eafy computation. Holder.

2. A reckoning; the refult of arithmetical operation.

If then their calculation be true; for fo they reckon. Hooker.

CALCULATOR. n. f. [from calculate.] A computer; a reckoner.

CA'LCULATORY. adj. [from calculate.] Belonging to calculation.

CA'LCULE. n. f. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning; compute.

The general calcule, which was made in the laft perambulation, exceeded eight millions. Howel.

CA'LCULOSE. } adj. [from calculus, Lat.] Stony; gritty.
CA'LCULOUS. }

The volatile falt of urine will coagulate fpirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the ftones, or calculofe concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown's Vulgar Err.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculous perfon, that the ftone is formed earlier than I have fuggefted. Sharp.

CA'LCULUS. n. f. [Latin.] The ftone in the bladder.

CA'LDRON. n. f. [chaudron, Fr. from calidus, Lat.] A pot; boiler; a kettle.

In the midft of all
There placed was a caldron wide and tall,
Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot. Spenfer.

Some ftrip the fkin, fome portion out the fpoil;
The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldrons boil;
Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil. Dryden.

In the late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vaft caldron, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the fides of the mountain.
Addifon's Remarks on Italy.

CALECHE. See CALASH.

To CA'LEFY. v. n. [calefio, Latin.] To grow hot; to be heated.

Cryftal will calefy unto electricity; that is, a power to attract ftraws, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely placed. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CA'LENDAR. n. f. [calendarium, Lat.] A regifter of the year, in which the months, and ftated times, are marked, as feftivals and holidays.

What hath this day deferv'd? what hath it done,
That it in golden letter fhould be fet
Among the high tides, in the calendar? Shakefpeare.

We compute from calendars differing from one another; the compute of the one anticipating that of the other.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Curs'd be the day when firft I did appear;
Let it be blotted from the calendar,

To CA'LENDER. v. a. [calendrer, Fr. Skinner.] To drefs cloth; to lay the nap of cloth fmooth.

CA'LENDER. n. f. [from the verb.] A hot prefs; a prefs in which clothiers fmooth their cloth.

CA'LENTURE. n. f. [from caleo, Lat.] A diftemper peculiar to failors, in hot climates; wherein they imagine the fea to be green fields, and will throw themfelves into it, if not reftrained. Quincy.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,
But to be caft into a calenture. Denham.
So, by a calenture mifled,
The mariner with rapture fees,
On the fmooth ocean's azure bed,
Enamel'd fields, and verdant trees;
With eager hafte, he longs to rove
In that fantaftick fcene, and thinks
It muft be fome enchanted grove;
And in he leaps, and down he finks. Swift.

The wretch is drench'd too deep,
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep:
Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross,
He sins, and sees not, senseless of his loss. Dryden.

CA'LLOUSNESS. n. s. [from callous.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.

The oftner we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callousness grows upon it. Cheyne.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteemed destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness and numbness of soul? Bentley.

CA'LLOW. adj. Unfledged; naked; without feathers.

Bursting with kindly rapture, forth disclos'd
Their callow young. Milton.

Then as an eagle, who, with pious care,
Was beating widely on the wing for prey,
To her now silent airy does repair,
And finds her callow infants forc'd away. Dryden.

How in small flights they know to try their young,

CALM. adj. [calme, Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous; applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and, through the trembling air,
Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play
A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay
Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair. Spenser.

2. Undisturb'd; unruffled; applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightning men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,
Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears. Pope.

CALM. n. s.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Raleigh.

Every pilot
Can steer the ship in calms; but he performs
The skilful part, can manage it in storms. Denham.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose; applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms: and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards: since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

To CALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus. Dryden.

Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind is leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness; which are generally used for riding by men of quality. See DROMEDARY.
Camels have large solid feet, but not hard; in the spring, their hair falls entirely off, in less than three days time, when the flies are extremely uneasy to them. Camels, it is said, will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment. It is reported, that nature has furnished them, for this purpose, with a very large ventricle, with many bags closed within the coats of it, round about it, for reserving the water. But the Jesuits in China, where they dissected several camels, found no such bags. When a camel is upon a journey, his master follows him, singing and whistling; and the louder he sings, the better the camel goes. The flesh of camels is served up at the best tables, among the Arabians, Persians, and other eastern nations; but the use of it was forbid the Hebrews, they being ranked by Moses among the unclean creatures, Deut. xiv. 7. Calmet.
Patient of thirst and toil,
Son of the desart! even the camel feels,
Shot through his wither'd heart, the firy blast. Thomson.

CAME'LOPARD. n. s. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. Trevoux.
The Italians call him giaraffa.
CA'MELOT. } n. s. [from camel] A kind of stuff originally made
CA'MLET. } by a mixture of silk and camels hair; it is now made with wool and silk.
This habit was not of camels skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grograin, or the like; in as much as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal. Brown.

Meantime the paſtor ſhears their hoary beards,
And cafes, of their hair, the loaden herds:
Their camelots warm in tents the ſoldier hold,
And ſhield the ſhiv'ring mariner from cold. Dryden.

CA'MERA OBSCURA. [Latin.] An optical machine uſed in a darkened chamber, ſo that the light coming only through a double convex glaſs, objects expoſed to daylight, and oppoſite to the glaſs, are repreſented inverted upon any white matter placed in the focus of the glaſs. Martin.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, ſtir the fire with your maſter's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the ſugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the Eaſt and Weſt Indies. Other reeds have their ſkin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the ſkin of the ſugar cane is ſoft, and the ſpongy matter or pith it contains very juicy. It uſually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter; though ſome have been mentioned in the iſland of Tabago twenty four feet high. The ſtem or ſtalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth a number of long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which ariſe the flower and the ſeed. There are likewiſe leaves ſpringing out from each knot; but theſe uſually fall as the cane riſes. The ground fit for ſugar canes is light, ſoft, and ſpongy, lying on a deſcent proper to carry off the water, and well turned to the ſun. They uſually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower, and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, though ſometimes not till fifteen; at which time they are found quite full of a white ſucculent marrow, whence is expreſſed the liquor of which ſugar is made. When ripe, they are cut, their leaves cleared off, and they are carried in bundles to the mills, which conſiſt of three wooden rollers, covered with ſteel plates. Chambers.

And the ſweet liquor on the cane beſtow,
From which prepar'd the luſcious ſugars flow. Blackmore.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane; whence the Spaniſh juego de canas.

Abenamar, thy youth theſe ſports has known,
Of which thy age is now ſpectator grown;
Judge like thou ſitt'ſt, to praiſe or to arraign,
The flying ſkirmiſh of the darted cane. Dryden.

4. A reed.

CA'NNIBAL. n. ſ. An anthropophagite; a man-eater.

The cannibals themſelves eat no man's fleſh, of thoſe that die of themſelves, but of ſuch as are ſlain. Bacon.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another; and he that hath moſt ſtrength and ſwiftneſs, doth eat and devour all his fellows. Davies.

It was my bent to ſpeak,
Of the cannibals that each other eat;
The anthropophagi, and men whoſe heads
Did grow beneath their ſhoulders. Shakeſp.

The captive cannibal, oppreſt with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, diſdains;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping croud;
And ſpent at laſt, and ſpeechleſs as he lies,
With firy glances mocks their rage, and dies. Granville.

If an eleventh commandment had been given, Thou ſhalt not eat human fleſh; would not theſe cannibals have eſteemed it more difficult than all the reſt? Bentley.

CA'NNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corioli, he ſcotcht him and notcht him like a carbanado.—Had he been cannibally given, he might have broiled, and eaten him too. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

In each seven small brass and leather guns, charged with case-shot. Clarendon.

CASE. n. s. [casus, Lat.]

1. Condition with regard to outward circumstances.

Unworthy wretch, quoth he, of so great grace
How dare I think such glory to attain?
These that have it attain'd, were in like case,
Quoth he, as wretched, and liv'd in like pain. Spenser.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;
Be now a father, and propose a son. Shakespeare.

Some knew the face,
And all had heard the much lamented case. Dryden.

These were the circumstances under which the Corinthians then were, and the argument which the apostle advances, is intended to reach their particular case. Atterbury.

My youth may be made, as it never fails in executions, a case of compassion. Pope.

2. State of things.

He saith, that if there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government, which seemeth rather an impossible case, than an untrue sentence. Bacon.

Here was the case; an army of English, wasted and tired with a long winter's siege, engaged an army of a greater number than themselves, fresh and in vigour. Bacon.

I can but be a slave where-ever I am; so that taken or not taken, 'till all a case to me. L'Estrange.

They are excellent in order to certain ends; he hath no need to use them, as the case now stands, being provided for with the provision of an angel. Taylor.

Your parents did not produce you much into the world, whereby you have fewer ill impressions; but they failed, as is generally the case, in too much neglecting to cultivate your mind. Swift.

3. In physick; state of the body.

It was well; for we had rather met with calms and contrary winds, than any tempests; for our sick were many, and in very ill case. Bacon.

Chalybeate water seems to be a proper remedy in hypochondriacal cases. Arbuthnot.

4. In ludicrous language, condition with regard to leanness, or health.

Thou liest, most ignorant monster, I am in case to justle a constable. Shakespeare.

Pray have but patience till then, and when I am in little better case, I'll throw myself in the very mouth of you. L'Estr.

Quoth Ralph, I should not, if I were
In case for action, now be here. Hudibras.

For if the fire be faint, or out of case,
He will be copy'd in his famish'd race. Dryden.

The priest was pretty well in case,
And shew'd some humour in his face;
Look'd with an easy careless mien,
A perfect stranger to the spleen. Swift.

5. Contingence.

The atheist, in case things should fall out contrary to his belief or expectation, hath made no provision for this case; if, contrary to his confidence, it should prove in the issue that there is a God, the man is lost and undone for ever. Tillotson.

6. Question relating to particular persons or things.

Well do I find each man most wise in his own case. Sidney.

It is strange, that the ancient fathers should not appeal to this judge, in all cases, it being so short and expedite a way for the ending of controversies. Tillotson.

7. Representation of any fact or question.

If he be not apt to beat over matters, and to call up one thing, to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers cases: so every defect of the mind may have a special receipt. Bacon.

8. The variation of nouns.

The several changes which the noun undergoes in the Latin and Greek tongues, in the several numbers, are called cases, and are designed to express the several views or relations under which the mind considers things with regard to one another; and the variation of the noun for this purpose is called declension. Clarke.

9. In case. [nel caso, Ital.] If it should happen; upon the supposition that: a form of speech now little used.

For in caſe it be certain, hard it cannot be for them to ſhew us where we ſhall find it; that we may ſay theſe were the orders of the apoſtles. Hoker.

A ſure retreat to his forces, in caſe they ſhould have an ill day, or unlucky chance in the field. Bacon.

This would be the accompliſhment of their common felicity, in caſe, either by their evil deſtiny or advice, they ſuffered not the occaſion to be loſt. Hayward.

To CASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in a caſe or cover.

Caſe ye, caſe ye; on with your vizours; there's money of the King's coming down the hill Shakeſpeare.

The cry went once for thee,
And ſtill it might, and yet it may again,
If thou would'ſt not entomb thyſelf alive,
And caſe thy reputation in a tent. Shakeſpeare.

On whoſe luxuriant herbage, half conceal'd,
Like a fall'n cedar, far diffus'd his train,
Cas'd in green ſcales, the crocodile extends. Thomſon.

2. To cover as a caſe.

Then comes my fit again, I had elſe been perfect;
As broad, and gen'ral, as the caſing air,
To ſaucy doubts and fears. Shakeſpeare.

3. To cover on the outſide with materials different from the inſide.

Then they began to caſe their houſes with marble.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

CASH. n. ſ. [caiſſe, Fr. a cheſt.] Money; properly ready money; money in the cheſt, or at hand.

A thief, bent to unhoard the caſh
Of ſome rich burgher. Par. Loſt.

He is at an end of all his caſh; he has both his law and his daily bread now upon truſt. Arbuthnot.

He ſent the thief, that ſtole the caſh, away,
And puniſh'd him that put it in his way. Pope.

CASH-KEEPER. n. ſ. [from caſh and keep.] A man entruſted with the money.

Diſpenſator was properly a caſh-keeper, or privy-purſe.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

CASHEWNUT. n. ſ. A tree.

The cup of the flower, which is produced at the extremity of a footſtalk, is oblong and quinqueid; the flower conſiſts of one leaf, which is divided into five long narrow ſegments; in the bottom of the calyx is the ovary, which becomes a ſoft pear-ſhaped fruit; upon the apex of which grows a veſſel, in which is contained one kidney-ſhaped ſeed. This tree is very common in Jamaica and Barbadoes; where it grows very large, but in England will rarely ſtand through our winters. The inhabitants of the Weſt Indies plant them from branches taken from the old trees; which, with them, take root very well, and in two years time produce fruits. Miller.

CASHIER. n. ſ. [from caſſe.] He that has charge of the money.

If a ſteward or caſhier be ſuffered to run on, without bringing him to a reckoning, ſuch a ſottiſh forbearance will teach him to ſhuffle. South.

A Venetian, finding his ſon's expences grow very high, ordered his caſhier to let him have no more money than what he could count when he received it. Locke.

Flight of caſhiers, or mobs, he'll never mind;
And knows no loſſes, while the muſe is kind. Pope.

To CASHIER. v. a. [caſſer, Fr. caſſare, Lat.]

1. To diſcard; to diſmiſs from a poſt, or a ſociety, with reproach.

Does 't not go well? Caſſio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that ſmall hurt haſt caſhier'd Caſſio. Shakeſp.

Seconds in factions many times prove principals; but many times alſo they prove cyphers, and are caſhiered. Bacon.

If I had omitted what he ſaid, his thoughts and words being thus caſhiered in my hands, he had no longer been Lucretius. Dryden.

They have already caſhiered ſeveral of their followers as mutineers. Addiſon.

The ruling rogue, who dreads to be caſhier'd,
Contrives, as he is hated, to be fear'd. Swift.

2. It ſeems, in the following paſſages, to ſignify the ſame as to annul; to vacate; which is ſufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we ſhould find a father corrupting his ſon, or a mother her daughter, we muſt charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baſeneſs of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which ſeems to be utter caſhiering of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity. South.

Some, out of an overfondneſs of that darling invention, caſhier, or at leaſt endeavour to invalidate, all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to thoſe proofs, as weak or fallacious. Locke.

CASK. n. ſ. [caſque, Fr. cadus, Lat.]

1. A barrel; a wooden veſſel to ſtop up liquour or proviſions.

The patient turning himſelf abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noiſe; like the rumbling of water in a caſk. Harvey.

Perhaps tomorrow he may change his wine;
And drink old ſparkling Alban, or Setine,
Whoſe title, and whoſe age, with mould o'ergrown,
The good old caſk for ever keeps unknown. Dryden.

2. It has caſk in a kind of plural ſenſe, to ſignify the commodity or proviſion of caſks.

Great inconveniencies grow by the bad caſk being commonly ſo ill ſeaſoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever loſt and caſt away. Raleigh.

CASK. } n. ſ. [caſque, Fr. caſſis, Lat.] A helmet; armour
CASQUE. } for the head: a poetical word.

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the caſque
Of thy pernicious enemy. Shakeſpeare.

And theſe
Sling weighty ſtones, when from afar they fight;
Their caſques are cork, a covering thick and light. Dryden.

What are his aims? why does he load with darts
His trembling hands, and cruſh beneath a caſk
His wrinkled brows? Addiſon.

CASKET. n. ſ. [a diminutive of caiſſe, a cheſt, caſſe, caſſette. Fr.] A ſmall box or cheſt for jewels, or things of particular value.

O ignorant poor man! what doſt thou bear,
Lock'd up within the caſket of thy breaſt?
What jewels, and what riches haſt thou there?
What heav'nly treaſure in ſo weak a cheſt? Davies.

They found him dead, and caſt into the ſtreets,
An empty caſket, where the jewel, life,
By ſome damn'd hand was robb'd, and ta'en away. Shakeſp.

Mine eye hath found that ſad ſepulchral rock,
That was the caſket of heav'ns richeſt ſtore. Milton.

That had by chance pack'd up his choiceſt treaſure
In one dear caſket, and ſav'd only that. Otway.

This caſket India's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

To CASKET. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a caſket.

I have writ my letters, caſketed my treaſure, and given order for our horſes. Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.

To CA'SSATE. v. a. [caſſer, Fr. caſſare, low Lat.] To vacate; to invalidate; to make void; to nullify.

This opinion ſuperſedes and caſſates the beſt medium we have. Ray.

CASSA'TION. n. ſ. [caſſatio, Lat.] A making null or void. D.

CA'SSADA. }

It has a ſhort ſpreading bell-ſhaped flower, conſiſting of one leaf, cut into ſeveral parts, whoſe pointal afterwards becomes a roundiſh fruit, compoſed of three cells joined together, each containing one oblong ſeed. To theſe notes ſhould be added, male flowers having no pointal, and which, growing round the female flower, fall off, and are never fruitful. The ſpecies are ſix: 1. The common caſſavi, or caſſada. 2. The moſt prickly caſſavi, with a chaſte-tree leaf. 3. Tree-like leſs prickly caſſavi, with white flowers growing in umbels, and a ſtinging wolfsbane leaf. 4. Shrubby caſſavi, without prickles, and ſmooth leaves, which are leſs divided, &c. The firſt ſort is cultivated in all the warm parts of America, where the root, after being diveſted of its milky juice, is ground to flour, and then made into cakes of bread. Of this there are two ſorts. The moſt common has purpliſh ſtalks, with the veins and leaves of a purpliſh colour; but the ſtalks of the other are green, and the leaves of a lighter green. The laſt ſort is not venomous, even when the roots are freſh and full of juice; which the negroes frequently dig up, roaſt, and eat, like potatoes, without any ill effects. The caſſada is propagated by cuttings, about fifteen or ſixteen inches long, taken from thoſe plants whoſe roots are grown to maturity. Theſe cuttings are planted by the Americans in their rainy ſeaſons, a foot or fourteen inches deep in the ground; and the land in which they are placed, muſt be well wrought. When the cuttings have taken root, they require no farther care than to be kept clear from weeds; and, in about eight or nine months, when grown to maturity, in good ground they will be as large as the calf of a man's leg, but commonly equal to the ſize of good parſneps. Miller.

CASSAWARE. See CASSIOWARY.

CA'SSIA. n. ſ. A ſweet ſpice mentioned by Moſes, Exod. xxx. 24. as an ingredient in the compoſition of the holy oil, which was to be made uſe of in the conſecration of the ſacred veſſels of the tabernacle. This aromatick is ſaid to be the bark of a tree very like cinamon, and grows in the Indies without being cultivated. Calmet.

All thy garments ſmell of myrrh, aloes, and caſſia. Pſ. xlv. 8.

CA'SSIA. n. ſ. The name of a tree.

It hath a cylindrical, long, taper, or flat pod, divided into many cells by tranſverſe diaphragms; in each of which is contained one hard ſeed, lodged, for the moſt part, in a clammy black ſubſtance, which is purgative. The flowers have five leaves, diſpoſed orbicularly. The ſpecies are nine; 1. The American caſſia, with roundiſh pointed leaves. 2. The purging caſſia, or pudding pipe tree, &c. Many of theſe plants will flower the ſecond year, and ſome of them will produce ripe ſeeds with us. The ſecond ſort grows to be a very large tree, not only in Alexandria, but alſo in the Weſt Indies. This is what produces the purging caſſia of the ſhops. Miller.

CA'SSIDONY, or Stickadore. n. ſ. [ſtoechas, Latin.] The name of a plant.

CA'SSIOWARY. n. ſ. A large bird of prey in the Eaſt Indies.

Have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick, between the two caſſiowaries in St. James's Park. Locke.

CA'SSOCK. n. ſ. [caſaque, Fr.] A cloſe garment; now generally that which clergymen wear under their gowns.

Half of the which dare not ſhake the ſnow from off their caſſocks, leſt they ſhake themſelves to pieces.
Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.

His ſcanty ſalary compelled him to run deep in debt for a new gown and caſſock, and now and then forced him to write ſome paper of wit or humour, or preach a ſermon for ten ſhillings, to ſupply his neceſſities. Swift.

CA'SSWEED. n. ſ. A common weed, otherwiſe called ſhepherd's pouch.

To CAST. v. a. preter. caſt; particip. paſſ. caſt. [kaſter, Daniſh.

1. To throw with the hand.

I rather chuſe to endure the wounds of thoſe darts, which envy caſteth at novelty, than to go on ſafely and ſleepily in the eaſy ways of ancient miſtakings. Raleigh.

They had compaſſed in his hoſt, and caſt darts at the people from morning till evening. 1 Maccabees.

Then caſt thy ſword away,
And yield thee to my mercy, or I ſtrike. Dryden and Lee.

Till you have drench'd our ſteeples, drown'd the cocks.
Shakeſp. King Lear.

What if all
Her ſtores were open'd, and this firmament
Of hell ſhould ſpout her cataracts of fire?
Impendent horrors! Milton.

No ſooner he, with them of man and beaſt
Select for life, ſhall in the ark be lodg'd,
And ſhelter'd round; but all the cataracts
Of heav'n ſet open, on the earth ſhall pour
Rain, day and night. Milton.

Torrents and loud impetuous cataracts,
Through roads abrupt, and rude unfaſhion'd tracts,
Run down the lofty mountain's channel'd ſides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

As blameful as the executioner? Shakeſpeare.

CA'USEY. } n. ſ. [chauſſée, Fr. This word, by a falſe notion of CA'USEWAY. } its etymology, has been lately written cauſeway.] A way raiſed and paved; a way raiſed above the reſt of the ground.

To Shuppim the lot came forth weſtward by the cauſey.
1 Chronicles.

Th' other way Satan went down,
The cauſeway to hell-gate. Paradiſe Loſt.
But that broad cauſeway will direct your way,
And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryden.
Whoſe cauſeway parts the vale with ſhady rows;
Whoſe ſeats the weary traveller repoſe. Pope.

CA'USTICAL. } adj. [καυστικὸς.] Medicaments which, by their CA'USTICK. } violent activity and heat, deſtroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eſchar, which they do by the extreme minuteneſs, aſperity, and quantity of motion, that, like thoſe of fire itſelf, deſtroy the texture of the ſolids themſelves, and change what they are applied to, into a ſubſtance like burnt fleſh; which, in a little time, with detergent dreſſing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacuity in the part. Quincy.

If extirpation be ſafe, the beſt way will be by cauſtical medicines or eſcaroticks. Wiſeman.

I propoſed eradicating by eſcaroticks, and began with a cauſtick ſtone. Wiſeman.

Air too hot, cold and moiſt, abounding perhaps with cauſtick, aſtringent, and coagulating particles. Arbuthnot.

CA'USTICK. n. ſ. A cauſtick or burning application.

It was a tenderneſs to mankind, that introduced corroſives and cauſticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.
The piercing cauſticks ply their ſpiteful pow'r,
Emeticks ranch, and keen catharticks ſcour. Garth.

CAUTEL. n. ſ. [cautela, Lat.] Caution; ſcruple; a word diſuſed.

And now no ſoil of cautel doth beſmerch
The virtue of his will. Shakeſpeare.

CA'UTELOUS. adj. [cauteleux, Fr.]

1. Cautious; wary; provident.

Palladio doth wiſh, like a cautelous artiſan, that the inward walls might bear ſome good ſhare in the burden. Wotton.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.

Of themſelves, for the moſt part, they are ſo cautelous and wily headed, eſpecially being men of ſo ſmall experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow ſuch ſubtilties and ſly ſhifts. Spenſer.

Your ſon
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice. Shakeſpeare.

CA'UTELOUSLY. adv. [from cautelous.] Cunningly; ſlily; treacherouſly; cautiouſly; warily.

The Jews, not undoubtedly reſolved of the ſciatica ſide of Jacob, do cautelouſly, in their diet, abſtain from both.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid aſleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cautelouſly get the ſtart and advantage, yet they will ſet back all things in ſtatu quo prius. Bacon.

CAUTERIZA'TION. n. ſ. [from cauterize.] The act of burning fleſh with hot irons, or cauſtick medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no ſuch bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the ſpirits. Wiſeman.

To CA'UTERIZE. v. a. [cauteriſer, Fr.] To burn with the cautery.

For each true word a bliſter, and each falſe,
Be cauterizing to the root o' th' tongue,
Conſuming it with ſpeaking. Shakeſpeare.

No marvel though cantharides have ſuch a corroſive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the inſecta, but is bred of a duller matter. Bacon.

The deſign of the cautery is to prevent the canal from cloſing; but the operators confeſs, that, in perſons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp.

CA'UTERY. n. ſ. [καίω uro.]

Cautery is either actual or potential; the firſt is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with cauſtick medicines. The actual cautery is generally uſed to ſtop mortification, by burning the Dead parts to the quick; or to ſtop the effuſion of blood, by ſcaring up the veſſels. Quincy.

In heat of fight it will be neceſſary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will ſecure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wiſeman.

CA'UTION. n. ſ. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it reſpects danger; foreſight; provident care; warineſs.
2. Security for.

Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might aſſure the people with as much aſſurance as worldly matters bear. Sidney.

The Cedar, upon this new acqueſt, gave him part of Bacharia for caution for his diſburſements. Howel.

The parliament would yet give his majeſty ſufficient caution that the war ſhould be proſecuted. Clarendon.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution by the means of ſureties, that he will perſevere in the proſecution of ſuch crimes. Ayliffe.

3. Proviſion or ſecurity againſt; direction.

In deſpite of all the rules and cautions of government, the moſt dangerous and mortal of vices will come off. L'Eſtrange.

4. Proviſionary precept.

Attention to the forementioned ſymptoms affords the beſt cautions and rules of diet, by way of prevention. Arbuthnot.

5. Warning.

To CA'UTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How ſhall our thought avoid the various ſnare?
Or wiſdom to our caution'd ſoul declare
The diff'rent ſhapes thou pleaſeſt to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to deſtroy? Prior.
You caution'd me againſt their chams,
But never gave me equal arms;
Your leſſons found the weakeſt part,
Aim'd at the head, but reach'd the heart. Swift.

CA'UTIONARY. adj. [from caution.] Given as a pledge, or in ſecurity.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hoſtage of your keeping it. Southerne.

Is there no ſecurity for the iſland of Britain? Has the enemy no cautionary towns and ſea-ports, to give us for ſecuring trade? Swift.

CA'UTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.] Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is ſometimes an inconſtant lover, becauſe he hath a great advantage. Swift.

CA'UTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive, wary manner.

They know how fickle common lovers are:
Their oaths and vows are cautiouſly believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.

CA'UTIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from cautious.] Watchfulneſs; vigilance; circumſpection; provident care; prudence with reſpect to danger.

I could not but approve the generous conſtancy and cautiouſneſs. K. Charles.

We ſhould always act with great cautiouſneſs and circumſpection, in points where it is not impoſſible that we may be deceived. Addiſon.

To CAW. v. n. [taken from the ſound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Ruſſet-pated choughs, many in ſort,
Riſing and cawing at the gun's report. Shakeſpeare.

There is a walk of aged elms, ſo very high, that the rooks and crows upon the tops ſeem to be cawing in another region.
Addiſon, Spectator.

The rook, who high amid the boughs
In early ſpring, his airy city builds,
And ceaſeleſs caws. Thomſon.

To CEASE. v. a. To put a ſtop to; to put an end to.

Haſte you to lord Timon;
Importune him for monies; be not ceas'd
With ſlight denial. Shakeſpeare.

You may ſooner, by imagination, quicken or ſlack a motion, than raiſe or ceaſe it; as it is eaſier to make a dog go ſlower, than to make him ſtand ſtill. Bacon.

Ceaſe then this impious rage. Paradiſe Loſt.
But he, her fears to ceaſe, Milton.
Sent down the meek-ey'd peace.
The diſcord is compleat, nor can they ceaſe
The dire debate, nor yet command the peace. Dryden.

CEASE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure.
The ceaſe of majeſty
Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws
What's near it, with it. Shakeſpeare.

CE'ASELESS. adj. [from ceaſe.] Inceſſant; perpetual; continual; without pauſe; without ſtop; without end.
My guiltleſs blood muſt quench the ceaſeleſs fire, Fairfax.
On which my endleſs tears were bootleſs ſpent.
All theſe, with ceaſeleſs praiſe, his works behold, Paradiſe Loſt.
Both day and night.
Like an oak
That ſtands ſecure, though all the winds employ
Their ceaſeleſs roar, and only ſheds its leaves,
Or maſt, which the revolving ſpring reſtores. Philips.

CE'CITY. n. ſ. [cæcitas, Lat.] Blindneſs; privation of ſight.
They are not blind, nor yet diſtinctly ſee; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency; they have ſight enough to diſcern the light, though not perhaps to diſtinguiſh objects or colours. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CECU'TIENCY. n. ſ. [cæcutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindneſs; cloudineſs of ſight.
There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CE'DAR. n. ſ. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.
It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than thoſe of the pine-tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, reſembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote diſtances from the fruit on the ſame tree. The ſeeds are produced in large cones, ſquamoſe and turbinated. The extenſion of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the ſhoots declining, and thereby ſhewing their upper ſurface, which is conſtantly cloathed with green leaves, ſo regularly as to appear as a diſtance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable proſpect. It is ſurpriſing that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees, would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the ſnow continues moſt part of the year. What we find in Scripture, of the loſty cedars, is no ways applicable to the ſtature of this tree; for we find by thoſe now growing in England, and by the teſtimony of travellers, that have ſeen thoſe few remaining trees on Mount Libanus, they are not inclined to grow very loſty, but extend their branches very far; to which the alluſion, made by the Pſalmiſt, agrees very well, when, deſcribing the flouriſhing ſtate of a people, he ſays, they ſhall ſpread their branches like the cedar tree. Maundrel, in his Travels, ſays, he meaſured one of the largeſt cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards ſix inches in circumference, and ſound, and thirty ſeven yards in the ſpread of its boughs. At about five or ſix yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof againſt the putrefaction of animal bodies. The ſaw duſt is thought to be one of the ſecrets uſed by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming myſtery. This wood is alſo ſaid to yield an oil, which is famous for preſerving books and writings, and the wood is thought by my lord Bacon to continue above a thouſand years ſound. It is alſo recorded, that, in the temple of Apollo, at Utica, there was found timber of near two thouſand years old; and the ſtatue of the goddeſs, in the famous Epeſian temple, was ſaid to be of this material, as well as the timber work of that glorious ſtructure. This ſort of timber is very dry, and ſubject to ſplit; nor does it well endure to be faſtened with nails; therefore pins of the ſame wood are much preferable. Miller.
I muſt yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge.
Whoſe arms gave ſhelter to the princely eagle;
Under whoſe ſhade the ramping lion ſlept,
Whoſe top branch overpeer'd Jove's ſpreading tree,
And kept low ſhrubs from winter's pow'rful wind.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

CE'DRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

To CEIL. v. a. [cælo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover the inner roof of a building.
And the greater houſe he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold. 2 Chronicles.
How will he, from his houſe ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head? Decay of Piety.

CE'ILING. n. ſ. [from ceil.] The inner roof.
Varniſh makes ceilings not only ſhine but laſt. Bacon.
And now the thicken'd ſky
Like a dark ceiling ſtood; down ruſh'd the rain
Impetuous. Milton.
So when the ſun by day, or moon by night,
Smite on the poliſh'd braſs their trembling light,
The glitt'ring ſpecies here and there divide,
and caſt their dubious beams from ſide to ſide:
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flaſh the glaring day. Dryden.

CE'LANDINE, (greater) [chelidonium, Lat.] A plant.
The cup of the flower conſiſts of two leaves, which ſoon fall away; the flower has four leaves, that are expanded in form of a croſs. It grows wild, and is uſed in medicine. Miller.

CE'LANDINE, (the leſſer, or Pilewort.) [chelidonium minus, Lat.]
It hath a gramoſe or granuloſe root; the leaves are roundiſh; the flower ſtalks trail upon the ground; the cup of the flower conſiſts of three leaves. Miller.

CE'LATURE. n. ſ. [cælatura, Lat.] The art of engraving or cutting in metals.

To CE'LEBRATE. v. a. [celebro, Lat.]

On the feaſt day, the father cometh forth, after divine ſervice, into a large room, where the feaſt is celebrated. Bacon.
3. To mention in a ſet or ſolemn manner, whether of joy or ſorrow.
This pauſe of pow'r, 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;
While England celebrates your ſafe return. Dryden.

CELEBRA'TION. n. ſ. [from celebrate.]
1. Solemn performance; ſolemn remembrance.
He laboured to drive ſorrow from her, and to haſten the celebration of their marriage. Sidney.
He ſhall conceal it,
While you are willing it ſhall come to note;
What time we will our celebration keep,
According to my birth. Shakeſpeare.
During the celebration of this holy ſacrament, you attend earneſtly to what is done by the prieſt. Taylor.
2. Praiſe; renown; memorial.
No more ſhall be added in this place, his memory deſerving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety and virtue, have been attained by few. Clarendon.
Some of the ancients may be thought ſometimes to have uſed a leſs number of letters, by the celebration of thoſe who have added to their alphabet. Holder.

CELE'BRIOUS. adj. [celeber, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted.
The Jews, Jeruſalem, and the Temple, having been always ſo celebrious; yet when, after their captivities, they were deſpoiled of their glory, even then, the Aſſyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured, with ſacrifices, the moſt high God, whom that nation worſhipped. Grew.

CELE'RIACK. n. ſ. A ſpecies of parſley; it is alſo called turnep-rooted celery.

CELE'RITY. n. ſ. [celeritas, Lat.] Swiftneſs; ſpeed; velocity.
We very well ſee in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celerity of diſcourſe; for, perceiving at the firſt but only ſome cauſe of ſuſpicion, and fear leſt it ſhould be evil, they are preſently, in one and the ſelf ſame breath, reſolved, that what beginning ſoever it had, there is no poſſibility it ſhould be good. Hooker.
His former cuſtom and practice was ever full of forwardneſs and celerity, to make head againſt them. Bacon.
Thus, with imagin'd wings, our ſwift ſcene flies,
In motion with no leſs celerity
Than that of thought. Shakeſpeare.
Three things concur to make a percuſſion great; the bigneſs, the denſity, and the celerity of the body moved. Digby.
Whatever encreaſeth the denſity of the blood, even without encreaſing its celerity, heats, becauſe a denſer body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot.

CE'LERY. n. ſ. A ſpecies of parſley; which ſee.

CELE'STIAL. adj. [celeſtis, Lat.]
1. Heavenly; relating to the ſuperiour regions.

2. Heavenly; relating to the bleſſed ſtate.
Play that ſad note
I nam'd my knell; whilſt I ſit meditating
On that celeſtial harmony I go to. Shakeſpeare.
3. Heavenly, with reſpect to excellence.
Canſt thou pretend deſire, whom zeal inflam'd
To worſhip, and a pow'r celeſtial nam'd? Dryden. Telemachus

Telemachus, his bloomy face
Glowing celestial sweet, with godlike grace. Pope.

CELE'STIAL. n. s. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

Thus affable and mild, the prince precedes,
And to the dome th' unknown celestial leads. Pope.

CELE'STIALLY. adv. [from celestial.] In a heavenly manner.

To CELE'STIFY. v. a. [from celestis, Lat.] To give something of heavenly nature to any thing.

We should affirm, that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terrestrified, and earth but heaven celestified, or that each part above had influence upon its affinity below. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CE'LIACK. adj. [κοιλία, the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.

The blood moving slowly through the celiack and mesenterick arteries, produces complaints. Arbuthnot.

CELIBACY. n. s. [from cælebs, Latin.] Single life; unmarried state.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty. Spectator.

By teaching them how to carry themselves in their relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, they have, without question, adorned the gospel, glorified God, and benefited man, much more than they could have done in the devoutest and strictest celibacy. Atterbury.

CE'LIBATE. n. s. [cælibatus, Lat.] Single life.

Where polygamy is forbidden, the males oblige themselves to celibate, and then multiplication is hindered. Graunt.

Your temples burned in their cement, and your franchises confined into an augure's bore. Shakesp.

There is a cement compounded of flour, whites of eggs, and stones powdered, that becometh hard as marble. Bacon.

You may see divers pebbles, and a crust of cement or stone between them, as hard as the pebbles themselves. Bacon.

The foundation was made of rough stone, joined together with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement. Arbuthnot.

2. Bond of union in friendship.

Let not the piece of virtue which is set
Betwixt us, as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram to batter.
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

What cement should unite heaven and earth, light and darkness? Glanville.

Look over the whole creation, and you shall see, that the band or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabrick, is gratitude. South.

To CEME'NT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite by means of something interposed.

But how the fear of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know. Shakesp.

Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all loose and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux: even an heap of sand, or fine powder, will suffer no hollowness within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet.

Edgar
Cemented all the long contending powers. Philips.

Love with white lead cements his wings;
White lead was sent us to repair
Two brightest, brittlest earthly things,
A lady's face, and china ware. Swift.

To CEME'NT. v. n. To come into conjunction; to cohere.

When a wound is recent, and the parts of it are divided by a sharp instrument, they will, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inosculation, and cement like one branch of a tree ingrafted on another. Sharp's Surgery.

Or maſt, which the revolving ſpring reſtores. Philips.

CE'CITY. n. ſ. [cæcitas, Lat.] Blindneſs; privation of ſight.
They are not blind, nor yet diſtinctly ſee; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency; they have ſight enough to diſcern the light, though not perhaps to diſtinguiſh objects or colours. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CECU'TIENCY. n. ſ. [cæcutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindneſs; cloudineſs of ſight.
There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CE'DAR. n. ſ. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.
It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than thoſe of the pine-tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, reſembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote diſtances from the fruit on the ſame tree. The ſeeds are produced in large cones, ſquamoſe and turbinated. The extenſion of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the ſhoots declining, and thereby ſhewing their upper ſurface, which is conſtantly cloathed with green leaves, ſo regularly as to appear as a diſtance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable proſpect. It is ſurpriſing that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees, would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the ſnow continues moſt part of the year. What we find in Scripture, of the loſty cedars, is no ways applicable to the ſtature of this tree; for we find by thoſe now growing in England, and by the teſtimony of travellers, that have ſeen thoſe few remaining trees on Mount Libanus, they are not inclined to grow very loſty, but extend their branches very far; to which the alluſion, made by the Pſalmiſt, agrees very well, when, deſcribing the flouriſhing ſtate of a people, he ſays, they ſhall ſpread their branches like the cedar tree. Maundrel, in his Travels, ſays, he meaſured one of the largeſt cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards ſix inches in circumference, and ſound, and thirty ſeven yards in the ſpread of its boughs. At about five or ſix yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof againſt the putrefaction of animal bodies. The ſaw duſt is thought to be one of the ſecrets uſed by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming myſtery. This wood is alſo ſaid to yield an oil, which is famous for preſerving books and writings, and the wood is thought by my lord Bacon to continue above a thouſand years ſound. It is alſo recorded, that, in the temple of Apollo, at Utica, there was found timber of near two thouſand years old; and the ſtatue of the goddeſs, in the famous Epeſian temple, was ſaid to be of this material, as well as the timber work of that glorious ſtructure. This ſort of timber is very dry, and ſubject to ſplit; nor does it well endure to be faſtened with nails; therefore pins of the ſame wood are much preferable. Miller.
I muſt yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whoſe arms gave ſhelter to the princely eagle;
Under whoſe ſhade the ramping lion ſlept,
Whoſe top branch overpeer'd Jove's ſpreading tree,
And kept low ſhrubs from winter's pow'rful wind.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

CE'DRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

To CEIL. v. a. [cælo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover the inner roof of a building.
And the greater houſe he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold. 2 Chronicles.
How will he, from his houſe ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head? Decay of Piety.

CE'ILING. n. ſ. [from ceil.] The inner roof.
Varniſh makes ceilings not only ſhine but laſt. Bacon.
And now the thicken'd ſky
Impetuous. Milton.

So when the ſun by day, or moon by night,
Strike on the poliſh'd braſs their trembling light,
The glitt'ring ſpecies here and there divide,
and caſt their dubious beams from ſide to ſide:
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flaſh the glaring day. Dryden.

CE'LANDINE, (greater) [chelidonium, Lat.] A plant.
The cup of the flower conſiſts of two leaves, which ſoon fall away; the flower has four leaves, that are expanded in form of a croſs. It grows wild, and is uſed in medicine. Miller.

CE'LANDINE, (the leſſer, or Pilewort.) [chelidonium minus, Lat.]
It hath a gramoſe or granuloſe root; the leaves are roundiſh; the flower ſtalks trail upon the ground; the cup of the flower conſiſts of three leaves. Miller.

That we our largeſt bounty may extend,
Where nature doth with merit challenge. Shakeſp.

And ſo much duty as my mother ſhew'd
To you, preferring you before her father;
So much I challenge, that I may profeſs
Due to the moor, my lord. Shakeſp. Othello.

Had you not been their father, theſe white flakes
Did challenge pity of them. Shakeſpeare.

So when a tyger ſucks the bullocks blood,
A famiſh'd lion, iſſuing from the wood,
Roars loudly fierce, and challenges the food. Dryden's Fables.

Haſt thou yet drawn o'er young Juba?
That ſtill would recommend thee more to Cæſar,
And challenge better terms. Addiſon.

6. To call any one to the performance of conditions.

I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modeſtly. Shakeſp.

2. A demand of ſomething as due.

There muſt be no challenge of ſuperiority, or diſcountenancing of freedom. Collier of Friendſhip.

3. In law. An exception taken either againſt perſons or things; perſons, as in aſſize to the jurors, or any one or more of them, by the priſoner at the bar. Challenge made to the jurors, is either made to the array, or to the polls: challenge made to the array is, when the whole number is excepted againſt, as partially empannelled: challenge to or by the poll, is when ſome one or more are excepted againſt, as not indifferent: challenge to the jurors is divided into challenge principal, and challenge for cauſe: challenge principal is that which the law allows without cauſe alledged, or farther examination; as a priſoner at the bar, arraigned upon felony, may peremptorily challenge to the number of twenty, one after another, of the jury empannelled upon him, alledging no cauſe. Cowel.

You are mine enemy, I make my challenge,
You ſhall not be my judge. Shakeſpeare.

CHA'LLENGER. n. ſ. [from challenge.]

1. One that defies or ſummons another to combat.

Young man, have you challenged Charles the wreſtler?—
No, fair princeſs; he is the general challenger.
Shakeſp. As you like it.

Death was denounc'd;
He took the ſummons, void of fear,
And unconcernedly caſt his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the grieſly challenger. Dryd.

2. One that claims ſuperiority.

Whoſe worth
Stood challenger on mount of all the age,
For her perfections. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

To CHA'MBLET. v. a. [from camelot. See CAMELOT.] To vary; to variegate.
Some have the veins more varied and chambleted; as oak, whereof wainſcot is made. Bacon.

CHA'MBREL of a Horſe. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg. Farrier's Dict.

CHAME'LEON. n. ſ. [χαμαίλεων.]
The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it faſtens itſelf to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its noſe long, and made in an obtuſe point; its back is ſharp, its ſkin plaited, and jagged like a ſaw from the neck to the laſt joint of the tail, and upon its head it has ſomething like a comb; like a fiſh, it has no neck. Some have aſſerted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been obſerved to feed on flies, catched with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white fleſh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, reſembling an elephant's trunk. It alſo ſhrinks, and grows longer. This animal is ſaid to aſſume the colour of thoſe things to which it is applied; but our modern obſervers aſſure us, that its natural colour, when at reſt and in the ſhade, is a bluiſh grey; though ſome are yellow, and others green, but both of a ſmaller kind. When it is expoſed to the ſun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour, and its parts, which have leaſt of the light upon them, are changed into ſpots of different colours. The grain of its ſkin, when the light doth not ſhine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes when it is handled, it ſeems to be ſpeckled with dark ſpots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and ſometimes if it be wrapped up in linen, when it is taken off, it is white; but it changes colour only in ſome parts of the body. Calmet.
A chameleon is a creature about the bigneſs of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his ſkin ſpotted with little tumours, leſs eminent nearer the belly; his tail ſlender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outſide, and two on the inſide; his tongue of a marvellous length in reſpect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a duſky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet ſpotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon.
I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon;
Change ſhapes with Proteus, for advantage. Shakeſp.
One part devours the other, and leaves not ſo much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons graſp after. Decay of Piety.
The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives
The colour of the thing to which he cleaves. Dryden.

To CHA'MFER. v. a. [chambrer, Fr.] To channel; to make furrows or gutters upon a column.

CHA'MFER. } n. ſ. [from to chamfer.] A ſmall furrow or gut-
CHA'MFRET. } ter on a column.

CHA'MOIS. n. ſ. [chamois, Fr.] An animal of the goat kind, whoſe ſkin is made into ſoft leather, called among us ſhammy.
Theſe are the beaſts which you ſhall eat; the ox, the ſheep, and wild ox, and the chamois. Deuteronomy.

CHA'MOMILE. n. ſ. [χαμαίμηλον.] The name of an odoriferous plant.
It hath a fibroſe root; the cup of the flower is ſquamoſe, which expands, and appears like many leaves; the flowers are radicated; the petals of the flower are white, and the diſh yellow; the leaves are cut into five ſegments. This plant was formerly in great requeſt for making green walks, and is ſtill cultivated in phyſick gardens for medicinal uſe, though it grows wild in great plenty. Miller.
Cool violets, and orpine growing ſtill,
Embathed balm, and chearful galingale,
Freſh coſtmary, and breathful chamomile,
Dull poppy, and drink-quick'ning ſetuale. Spenſer.
For though the chamomile the more it is trodden on the faſter it grows; yet youth, the more it is waſted, the ſooner it wears. Shakeſpeare.
Watery liquors force it, as diſtilled water with diuretick, poſſet drink with chamomile flowers. Floyer.

To CHAMP. v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.
Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in ſmoke, and betle is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.
The fiend reply'd not, overcome with rage;
But, like a proud ſteed rein'd, went haughty on,
Champing his iron curb. Paradiſe Loſt.
At his command,
The ſteeds capariſon'd, with purple ſtand,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To devour.
A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left ſuch a delicious roughneſs on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

To CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.
Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occaſion to Muſidorus to come near him. Sidney.
They began to repent of that they had done, and irefully to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker.
His jaws did not anſwer equally to one another; but by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Wiſeman.

CHA'MPAIGN. n. ſ. [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country.
In the abuſes of the cuſtoms, meſeems, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large ſtretch out your diſcourſe. Spenſer.
Of all theſe bounds,
With ſhadowy foreſts and with champaigns rich'd,
We make thee lady. Shakeſpeare.
If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open open champaign, the more mighty will continually ſeek occaſion to extend his limits unto the further border thereof. Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without diſarray, by the ſpace of ſome miles, part of the way champaign unto the city of Gaunt, with leſs loſs of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his ſide two rivers flow'd,
Th' one winding, th' other ſtraight, and left between Fair champaign, with leſs rivers interven'd. Milton.

CHA'MPERTORS. n. ſ. [from champerty. In law.] Such as move ſuits, or cauſe them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and purſue, at their proper coſts, to have part of the land in conteſt or part of the gains. Cowel.

CHA'MPERTY. n. ſ. [champart, Fr. In law.] A maintenance of any man in his ſuit while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowel.

CHAMPI'GNON. n. ſ. [champignon, Fr.] A kind of muſhroom.

He viler friends with doubtful muſhrooms treats,
Secure for you, himſelf champignons eats. Dryden.

It has the reſemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob at one end. Woodward on Foſſils.

CHA'MPION. n. ſ. [champion, Fr. campio, low Lat.]

1. A man who undertakes a cauſe in ſingle combat.

In many armies, if the matter ſhould be tried by duel between two champions, the victory would go on the one ſide. Bacon's Col. of Good and Evil.

For hot, cold, moiſt, and dry, four champions fierce,
Strive here for maſt'ry and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms. Milton.

O light of Trojans, and ſupport of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy! Dryden.

At length the adverſe admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right. Dryden.

2. A hero; a ſtout warriour.

A ſtouter champion never handled ſword. Shakeſp.

This makes you incapable of conviction, and they applaud themſelves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no leſs for him that trieth the combat in his own caſe, than for him that fighteth in the caſe of another. Cowel.

To CHA'MPION. v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The ſeed of Banquo, kings!
Rather than ſo, come, fate, into the liſt,
And champion me to th' utterance. Shakeſp.

CHANCE. n. ſ. [chance, Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cauſe of fortuitous events.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, ſo we profeſs
Ourſelves to be the ſlaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakeſp.

The only man of all that chance could bring,
To meet my arms, was worth the conquering. Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itſelf; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of ſpeaking, whereby we would expreſs, that ſuch effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper cauſes, but without their deſign to produce them. Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune, or chance.

3. Accident; caſual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To ſay a thing is a chance or caſualty, as it relates to ſecond cauſes, is not profaneneſs, but a great truth; as ſignifying no more, than that there are ſome events beſides the knowledge and power of ſecond agents. South.

The beauty I beheld, has ſtruck me dead;
Unknowingly ſhe ſtrikes, and kills by chance;
Poiſon is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance. Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance direction, which thou canſt not ſee. Pope.

4. Event; ſucceſs; luck.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodneſs
Be like our warranted quarrel! Shakeſp.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd
To ſay, extremity was the trier of ſpirits,
That common chances common men could bear.
Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

6. Poſſibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet
Some wand'ring ſpirit of heav'n, by fountain ſide,
Or in thick ſhade retir'd. Milton.

Then your ladyſhip might have a chance to eſcape this addreſs. Swift.

CHANCE. adj. [It is ſeldom uſed but in compoſition.] Happening by chance.

Now ſhould they part, malicious tongues would ſay,
They met like chance companions on the way. Dryden.

I would not take the gift,
Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lay for the next chance comer. Dryden and Lee.

To CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chanceſt on; but think;——
Thou haſt thy miſtreſs ſtill. Shakeſpeare.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother? Shakeſp. Henry IV.

Ay, Caſca, tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,
That Cæſar looks ſo ſad. Shakeſpeare.

He chanced upon divers of the Turks victuallers, whom he eaſily took. Knolles.

I choſe the ſafer ſea, and chanc'd to find
A river's mouth impervious to the wind. Pope.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. n. ſ. [from chance and medley. In law.] The caſual ſlaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the ſlayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway-ſide, by which many uſually travel, and caſt down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one paſſing by is ſlain: in this caſe he offends, becauſe he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himſelf. Cowel.

If ſuch an one ſhould have the ill hap, at any time, to ſtrike a man dead with a ſmart ſaying, it ought, in all reaſon and conſcience, to be juged but a chancemedley. South.

CHA'NCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia. Sidney.

CHANCEL. n. ſ. [from cancelli, Lat. lettices, with which the chancel was incloſed.] The eaſtern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be allowable or no, that the miniſter ſhould ſay ſervice in the chancel. Hooker.

The chancel of the church is vaulted with a ſingle ſtone of four feet in thickneſs, and an hundred and fourteen in circumference. Ailiffe.

CHA'NCELLOR. n. ſ. [cancellarius, Lat. chancelier, Fr. from cancellare literas, vel ſcriptum linea per medium ducta damnare, and ſeemeth of itſelf likewiſe to be derived à cancellis, which ſignify all one with κιγκλιδες, a lettice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid croſsways one over another, ſo that a man may ſee through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment ſeats were compaſſed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the preſs of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.]

Quæſitus regni tibi cancellarius Angli,
Primus ſolliciti mente petendus erit.
Hic eſt, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,
Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.

Verſes of Nigel de Wetekre to the biſhop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.

1. Cancellarius, at the firſt, ſignified the regiſters or actuaries in court; grapharios, ſcil. qui conſcribendis & excipiendis judicum actis dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and not only in other kingdoms, but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in cauſes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and ſubject himſelf only to the law of nature and conſcience. Cowel.

Turn out, you rogue, how like a beaſt you lie:
Go, buckle to the law: is this an hour
To ſtretch your limbs; you'll ne'er be chancellor. Dryd. jun.

Ariſtides was a perſon of the ſtricteſt juſtice, and beſt acquainted with the laws, as well as forms of their government; ſo that he was in a manner chancellor of Athens. Swift.

2. CHANCELLOR, in the Eccleſiaſtical Court. A biſhop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the biſhops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. CHANCELLOR of a Cathedral. A dignitary, whoſe office it is to ſuperintend the regular exerciſe of devotion.

4. CHANCELLOR of the Exchequer. An officer who ſits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber, and, with the reſt of the court, ordereth things to the king's beſt benefit. He has power, with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal ſtatutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of firſt-fruits. 1. A child left or taken in the place of another.

And her baſe elfin breed there for thee left;
Such, men do changelings call, ſo chang'd by fairies theft.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen.

She, as her attendant, hath
A lovely boy ſtol'n from an Indian king;
She never had ſo ſweet a changeling.
Shakeſp. Midſummer Night's Dream.

2. An ideot; a fool; a natural.

Changelings and fools of heav'n, and thence ſhut out,
Wildly we roam in diſcontent about. Dryden.

Would any one be a changeling, becauſe he is leſs determined by wiſe conſiderations than a wiſe man? Locke.

3. One apt to change; a waverer.

'Twas not long
Before from world to world they twung;
As they had turn'd from ſide to ſide,
And as they changelings liv'd, they dy'd. Hudibras.

CHA'NGER. n. ſ. [from change.] One that is employed in changing or diſcounting money.

CHA'NNEL. n. ſ. [canal, Fr. canalis, Lat.]

1. The hollow bed of running waters.

It is not ſo eaſy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain courſe, to change the channel, and turn their ſtreams another way. Spenſer.

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the loweſt ſtream
Do kiſs the moſt exalted ſhores of all. Shakeſpeare.

So th' injur'd ſea, which, from her wonted courſe,
To gain ſome acres, avarice did force;
If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
No longer will from her old channel ſtay. Waller.

Had not the ſaid ſtrata been diſlocated, ſome of them elevated, and others depreſſed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the ſea. Woodward.

The tops of mountains and hills will be continually waſhed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the ſtreams. Bentley.

2. Any cavity drawn longways.

Complaint and hot deſires, the lover's hell,
And ſcalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell.
Dryden's Fables.

3. A ſtrait or narrow ſea, between two countries; as the Britiſh Channel between Britain and France; St. George's Channel between Britain and Ireland.

4. A gutter or furrow of a pillar.

To CHA'NNEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut any thing in channels.

No more ſhall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruiſe her flowrets with the armed hoofs
Of hoſtile paces. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

The body of this column is perpetually channelled, like a thick plaited gown. Wotton's Architecture.

Torrents, and loud impetuous cataracts,
Roll down the lofty mountain's channel'd ſides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

They chant to the ſound of the viol, and invent to themſelves inſtruments of muſick. Amos, vi. 7.

Heav'n heard his ſong, and haſten'd his relief;
And chang'd to ſnowy plumes his hoary hair,
And wing'd his flight, to chant aloft in air. Dryden.

CHANT. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Song; melody.

A pleaſant grove,
With chant of tuneful birds reſounding loud.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

CHA'NTER. n. ſ. [from chant.] A ſinger; a ſongſter.

You curious chanters of the wood,
That warble forth dame Nature's lays. Wotton.

Jove's etherial lays, reſiſtleſs fire,
The chanter's ſoul, and raptur'd ſong inſpire,
Inſtinct divine! nor blame ſevere his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice. Pope.

CHA'NTICLEER. n. ſ. [from chanter and clair, Fr.] The name given to the cock, from the clearneſs and loudneſs of his crow.

And chearful chanticleer, with his note ſhrill,
Had warned once, that Phœbus' firy car
In haſte was climbing up the eaſtern hill. Fairy Queen.

Hark, hark, I hear
The ſtrain of ſtrutting chanticleer. Shakeſpeare.

Stay, the chearful chanticleer
Tells you that the time is near. Ben. Johnſon.

Theſe verſes were mentioned by Chaucer, in the deſcription of the ſudden ſtir, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox. Camden.

Within this homeſtead liv'd without a peer,
For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer. Dryden.

CHA'NTRESS. n. ſ. [from chant.] A woman ſinger.

Sweet bird, that ſhun'ſt the noiſe of folly,
Moſt muſical, moſt melancholy,
Thee, chantreſs of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-ſong. Milton.

CHA'NTRY. n. ſ. [from chant.]

Chantry is a church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue, for the maintenance of one or more prieſts, daily to ſing maſs for the ſouls of the donors, and ſuch others as they appoint. Cowel.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,
Into the chantry by; to thoſe before him,
And, underneath that conſecrated roof,
Plight me the full aſſurance of your faith. Shakeſp.

CHA'OS. n. ſ. [chaos, Lat. χάος.]

1. The maſs of matter ſuppoſed to be in confuſion before it was divided by the creation into its proper claſſes and elements.

The whole univerſe would have been a confuſed chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confuſion; irregular mixture.

Had I followed the worſt, I could not have brought church and ſtate to ſuch a chaos of confuſions, as ſome have done. K. Charles.

Their reaſon ſleeps, but mimick fancy wakes,
Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes
From words and things, ill ſorted, and miſjoin'd,
The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind. Dryden.

3. Any thing where the parts are undiſtinguiſhed.

We ſhall have nothing but darkneſs and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.

Pleas'd with a work, where nothing's juſt or fit,
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit. Pope.

CHAO'TICK. adj. [from chaos.] Reſembling chaos; confuſed.

When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick ſtate, and the earthy particles ſubſided, then thoſe ſeveral beds were, in all probability, repoſited in the earth. Derham.

To CHAP. v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut. This word ſeems originally the ſame with chop; nor were they probably diſtinguiſhed at firſt, otherwiſe than by accident; but they have now a meaning ſomething different, though referable to the ſame original ſenſe.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

It alſo weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chapping it in ſundry places. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady. Shakespeare.

There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity. Burnet.

2. Fitness to be hunted, appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shak.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;
Oh! let me still that spotless name retain,
Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey,
And only make the beasts of chase my prey. Dryden.

3. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them; insomuch as of one hundred ships, there came scarce thirty to work: howbeit, with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them chase. Bacon.

One day, upon the sudden, he sallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that, at the first onset, he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedy execution. Knolles.

They seek that joy, which us'd to glow
Expanded on the hero's face;
When the thick squadrons prest the foe,
And William led the glorious chase. Prior.

4. Pursuit of something as desirable.

Yet this mad chase of fame, by few pursu'd,
Has drawn destruction on the multitude. Dryden.

5. Hunting match.

Tell him, h'ath made a match with such a wrangler,
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chases. Shakespeare.

6. The game hunted.

She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase, went circling about, rising so with the less sense of rising. Sidney.

Hold, Warwick: seek thee out some other chase,
For I myself must put this deer to death. Shakesp.

Honour's the noblest chase; pursue that game,
And recompence the loss of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not endowed with so many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game than a park. A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot; and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers. Cowel.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the northside of this pleasant chase. Shakesp.

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken within side. Chambers.

CHASE-GUN. n. s. [from chase and gun.] Guns in the forepart of the ship, fired upon those that are pursued.

Mean time the Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our stern they send. Dryden.

CHA'SER. n. s. [from chase.] Hunter; pursuer; driver.

Then began
A stop i' th' chaser, a retire; anon
A rout, confusion thick. Shakesp.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye
Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry. Denham.

Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey,
At once the chaser, and at once the prey,
Lo Rufus tugging at the deadly dart,
Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart. Pope.

CHASM. n. s. [χάσμα.]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gape; an opening.

In all that visible corporeal world, we see no chasms or gaps. Locke.

He must avenge the world, and give it peace. Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience.

Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shakespeare.

Know, sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court,
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shakesp.

The gay social sense
By decency chastis'd. Thomson.

CHASTI'SEMENT. n. s. [chastiment, Fr.] Correction; punishment. These words are all commonly, though not always, used of domestick or parental punishment.

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement? Shakesp.

He held the chastisement of one which molested the see of Rome, pleasing to God. Raleigh.

For seven years what can a child be guilty of, but lying, or ill-natur'd tricks; the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod. Locke.

He receives a fit of sickness as the kind chastisement and discipline of his heavenly father, to wean his affections from the world. Bentley.

CHA'STITY. n. s. [castitas, Lat.]

1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity? Shakesp.

Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows: continence of married persons: chaste marriages are honourable and pleasing to God. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

Ev'n here where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity.

There is not chastity enough in language,
Without offence to utter them. Shakesp.

CHE'STNUT. CHE'STNUT-TREE. n. ſ. [chaſtaigne, Fr. caſtanea, Lat.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote diſtances from the fruit, on the ſame tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each huſk or covering. This tree was formerly in great plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the moſt part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the beſt oak, and, for many purpoſes, far exceeds it, particularly for making veſſels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly ſeaſoned, to maintain its bulk conſtantly, and is not ſubject to ſhrink or ſwell, like other timber. Miller.

2. The fruit of the cheſtnut-tree.

A woman's tongue,
That gives not half ſo great a blow to th' ear,
As will a cheſtnut in a farmer's fire. Shakeſp.

October has a baſket of ſervices, medlars and cheſtnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacham.

CHE'STON. n. s. See PLUM, of which it is a species.

CHEVALIER. n. s. [chevalier, Fr.] A knight; a gallant strong man.

Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;
And I am lowted by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakesp.

CHEVA'UX de Frise. n. s. [Fr. The singular Cheval de Frise is seldom used.] The Friesland horse, which is a piece of timber, larger or smaller, and traversed with wooden spikes, pointed with iron, five or six feet long; used in defending a passage, stopping a breach, or making a retrenchment to stop the cavalry. It is also called a turnpike, or tourniquet. Chambers.

CHE'VEN. n. s. [chevesne, Fr.] A river fish; the same with chub.

CHE'VERIL. n. s. [cheverau, Fr.] A kid; kidleather.

A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward. Shakesp.

Which gifts the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakesp.

O, here's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

CHEVISANCE. n. s. [chevisance, Fr.] Enterprize; atchievement. A word now not in use.

Fortune, the foe of famous chevisance,
Seldom, said Guyon, yields to virtue's aid,
But in her way throws mischief and mischance.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.

CHE'VRON. n. s. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand. Harris.

To CHEW. v. a. [ceopyan, Sax. kauwen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appear before us. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy. Shakesp.

This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,
Nor chew'd the flesh of lambs. Dryden.

The vales
Descending gently, where the lowing herd
Chews verd'rous pasture. Philips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate, or ruminate in the thoughts.

While the fierce monk does at his trial stand,
He chews revenge, abjuring his offence:
Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,
He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence. Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heav'n's in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew its name. Shakesp.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with diligence and attention. Bacon's Essays.

To CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
'Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shakesp.

Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon't. L'Estrange.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

CHICANE. n. s. [chicane, Fr.] derived by Menage from the Spanish word chico, little.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private cases, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke.

His attornies have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicane. Arbuthnot.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,
He strove to lengthen the campaign,
And save his forces by chicane. Prior.

To CHICA'NE. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

CHICA'NER. n. s. [chicaneur, Fr.] A petty sophister; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

This is the only way to distinguish the two most different things I know in the world, a logical chicaner from a man of reason. Locke on Human Understanding.

CHICA'NERY. n. s. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry; mean arts of wrangle.

His anger at his ill success, caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve such as discovered most of the chicanery and futility of the practice. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

CHICHES. n. s. See CHICKPEAS.

CHI'CHLING VETCH. n. s. [lathyrus, Lat.] The plants of this species produce abundance of flowers, which are very ornamental in basons or pots of flowers to place in chimnies, and other parts of large rooms. In Germany they are cultivated, and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted. Miller.

CHICK. } n. s. [cicen, Sax. kieken, Dutch.]
CHICKEN. }

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.

All my pretty ones?
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop! Shakesp. Macbeth.

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick. Davies.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor yet hath seen the like motion, yet he readily practiseth it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Ev'n since she was a sen-night old they say,
Was chaste and humble to her dying day;
Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobey. Dryden.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,
Upon a chick and pint of wine:
On rainy days I dine alone,
And pick my chicken to the bone. Swift.

2. A word of tenderness.

My Ariel, chick,
This is thy charge. Shakesp. Tempest.

3. A term for a young girl.

Then, Chloe, still go on to prate
Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;
Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints, that Stella is no chicken. Swift.

CHI'CKENHEARTED. adj. [from chicken and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,
Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chickenhearted,
To fright the ladies first, and then be parted. Prol. to Sp. F.

The CHI'CKENPOX. n. s. An exanthematous distemper, so called from its being of no very great danger.

CHI'CKLING. n. s. [from chick.] A small chicken.

CHI'CKPEAS. n. s. [from chick and pea.]

It hath a papilionaceous flower, succeeded by short swelling pods, like the inflated bladder of a fish: the seeds are shaped like a ram's head. It is seldom cultivated in England, where peas will do well, which are much preferable. Miller.

CHI'CKWEED. n. s. [chick and weed.] The name of a plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, are common applications, and of good use, in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk. Wiseman of Tumours.

To CHIDE. v. a. preter. chid or chode, part. chid or chidden. [cidan, Sax.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words: applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth. Shakesp.

If he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels,
And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove. Shakesp.

Those, that do teach your babes,
Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks;
He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding. Shakesp. Othello.

Scylla wept,
And chid her barking waves into attention. Milton.

Above the waves as Neptune shew'd his face,
To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race. Waller.

You look, as if yon stern philosopher
Had just now chid you. Addison's Cato.

If any woman of better fashion in the parish happened to be absent from church, they were sure of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her. Swift.

2. To drive away with reproof.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
Have chid me from the battle. Shakesp.

3. To blame; to reproach: applied to things.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay,
And fountains, o'er the pebbles, chid your stay. Dryd.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haste;
For, the work perfected, the joy was past. Prior.

To CHIDE. v. n.

1. To clamour; to scold.

What had he to do to chide at me. Shakesp. As you like it.

Next morn, betimes, the bride was missing:
The mother scream'd, the father chid,
Where can this idle wench be hid? Swift.

2. To quarrel with.

The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you. Shakesp. Othello.

3. To make a noise.

My duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

CHI'DER. n. s. [from chide.] A rebuker; a reprover.

Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray.—
I love no chiders, sir. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

CHIEF. adj. [chef, the head, Fr.]

1. Principal; most eminent; above the rest in any respect.

These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's works. 1 Kings, ix. 23.

The hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass. Ezra, ix. 2.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;
At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend. Pope's Epist.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A froward man soweth strife, and a whisperer separateth chief friends. Proverbs, xvi. 28.

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferiour, or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it. Locke's Pref. to St. Paul's Ep.

4. It is used by some writers in the superlative degree; but, I think, improperly: the comparative is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain
Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son. Shakespeare.

Doeg an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen. 1 Sa. xxi. 7.

He sometimes denied admission to the chiefest officers of the army. Clarendon.

CHIEF. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A commander; a leader.

Is pain to them
Less pain, less to be fled? or thou than they
Less hardy to endure; courageous chief!
The first in flight from pain. Milton's Paradise Lost.

After or before were never known
Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone. Dryden's Fab.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array;
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

2. In CHIEF, in law. In capite, without a superiour lord.

All sums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon's Off. Alienations.

I shall be proud to hold my dependance on you in chief, as I do part of my small fortune in Wiltshire. Dryden.

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like atchievement; a mark of distinction.

Where be the nosegays that she dight for thee?
The coloured chaplets wrought within a chief,
The knottish rush-rings, and gilt rosemary. Spenser.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is so called of the French word chef, the head or upper part: this possesses the upper third part of the escutcheon. Peacham on Drawing.

CHI'EFLESS. adj. [from chief.] Without a head; without a leader.

And chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign,
And navies yawn'd for orders on the main. Dunciad.

CHI'EFLY. adv. [from chief.] Principally; eminently; more than common.

Any man who will seriously consider the nature of an epic poem, what actions it describes, and what persons they are chiefly whom it informs, will find it a work full of difficulty. Dryden's Juven. Preface.

CHI'EFRIE. n. s. [from chief.] A small rent paid to the lord paramount.

They shall be well able to live upon those lands, to yield her majesty reasonable chiefrie, and also give a competent maintenance unto the garrisons. Spenser.

Would the reserved rent at this day be any more than a small chiefrie. Swift.

CHI'EFTAIN. n. s. [from chief, n. s. captain.]

1. A leader; a commander.

That forc'd their chieftain, for his safety's sake,
(Their chieftain Humber named was aright)
Unto the mighty stream him to betake,
Where he an end of battle and of life did make. Fairy Q.

2. The head of a clan.

It broke, and absolutely subdued all the lords and chieftains of the Irishry. Davies on Ireland.

CHIE'VANCE. n. s. [probably from achevance, Fr. purchase] Traffick, in which money is extorted; as discount. Now obsolete.

There were good laws against usury, the bastard use of money; and against unlawful chevances and exchanges, which is bastard usury. Bacon's Henry VII.

CHILBLA'IN. n. s. [from chill, cold, and blain; so that Temple seems mistaken in his etymology, or has written it wrong to serve a purpose.] Sores made by frost.

I remembered the cure of chilblains when I was a boy, (which may be called the childrens gout) by burning at the fire Temple.

CHILD. n. s. in the plural CHILDREN. [cild, Sax.]

1. An infant, or very young person.

In age, to wish for youth is full as vain,
As for a youth to turn a child again. Denham.

We should no more be kinder to one child than to another, than we are tender of one eye more than of the other. L'Estr.

The young lad must not be ventured abroad at eight or ten, for fear of what may happen to the tender child; though he then runs ten times less risque than at sixteen. Locke.

The stroak of death is nothing: children endure it, and the greatest cowards find it no pain. Wake's Prep. for Death.

2. One in the line of filiation, opposed to the parent.

Where children have been exposed, or taken away young, and afterwards have approached to their parents presence, the parents, though they have not known them, have had a secret joy, or other alteration thereupon. Bacon's Natural History.

I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shakesp.

So unexhausted her perfections were,
That for more children, she had more to spare. Dryden.

He in a fruitful wife's embraces old,
A long increase of childrens children told. Add. Ovid's Met.

3. In the language of Scripture.

One weak in knowledge. Isa. x. 19. 1 Cor. xiii. 11.

Such as are young in grace. 1 John, ii. 13.

Such as are humble and docile. Matt. xvii. 3, 4.

The descendants of a man, how remote soever, are called children; as the children of Edom, the children of Israel.

The children of light, the children of darkness; who follow light, who remain in darkness.

The elect, the blessed, are also called the children of God.

How is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints! Wisdom, v. 5.

In the New Testament, believers are commonly called children of God.

Ye are all the children of God, by faith in Jesus Christ. Gal. iii. 26. Calmet.

4. A girl child.

Mercy on's, a bearne! a very pretty bearne!
A boy, or child, I wonder! Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

5. Any thing, the product or effect of another.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples. Shakesp. Macbeth.

6. To be with CHILD. To be pregnant.

If it must stand still, let wives with child,
Pray that their burthen may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be crost. Shakesp. K. John.

To CHILD. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring children.

The spring, the summer,
The childing autumn, angry winter, change
Their wonted liveries. Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

As to childing women, young vigorous people, after irregularities of diet, in such it begins with hæmorrhages. Arbuthnot.

CHI'LDBEARING, participial substantive. [from child and bear.] The act of bearing children.

To thee,
Pains only in childbearing were foretold,
And, bringing forth, soon recompens'd with joy,
Fruit of thy womb. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The timorous and irresolute Sylvia has demurred 'till she is past childbearing. Addison's Spectator.

CHI'LDBED. n. s. [from child and bed.] The state of a woman bringing a child or being in labour.

The funerals of prince Arthur, and of queen Elizabeth, who died in childbed in the Tower. Bacon's Henry VII.

Pure, as when wash'd from spot of childbed stain. Par. Reg.

Yet these, tho' poor, the pain of childbed bear. Dryden.

In the whole ſex of women, God hath decreed the ſharpeſt pains of childbirth; to ſhew, that there is no ſtate exempt from ſorrow. Taylor's Holy Living.

He to his wife, before the time aſſign'd
For childbirth came, thus bluntly ſpoke his mind Dryden.

CHI'LDED. adj. [from child.] Furniſhed with a child.

How light and portable my pain ſeems now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow;
He childed as I father'd. Shakeſp. King Lear.

CHI'LDERMAS DAY. [from child and maſs.]

The day of the week, throughout the year, anſwering to the day on which the feaſt of the holy Innocents is ſolemnized, which weak and ſuperſtitious perſons think an unlucky day.

So you talk not of hares, or ſuch uncouth things; for that proves as ominous to the fiſherman, as the beginning of a voyage on the day when childermas day fell, doth to the mariner. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CHI'LDHOOD. n. ſ. [from child; cilðhaþ, Sax.]

1. The ſtate of infants; or, according to ſome, the time in which we are children.

Now I have ſtain'd the childhood of our joy
With blood, remov'd but little from our own. Shakeſpeare.

The ſons of lords and gentlemen ſhould be trained up in learning from their childhood. Spenſer on Ireland.

Seldom have I ceas'd to eye
Thy infancy, thy childhood, and thy youth. Milton.

The ſame authority that the actions of a man have with us in our childhood, the ſame, in every period of life, has the practice of all whom we regard as our ſuperiors. Rogers.

2. The time of life between infancy and puberty.

Infancy and childhood demand thin, copious, nouriſhing aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The properties of a child.

Their love in early infancy began,
And roſe as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden's Fables.

CHI'LDISH. adj. [from child.]

1. Having the qualities of a child; trifling, ignorant; ſimple.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is but beginning and almoſt childiſh: then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile. Bacon's Eſſays.

2. Becoming only children; trivial; puerile.

Muſidorus being elder by three or four years, by the difference there was taken away the occaſion of childiſh contentions. Sidney.

The lion's whelps ſhe ſaw how he did bear,
And lull in rugged arms withouten childiſh fear. Fairy Qu.

When I was yet a child, no childiſh play
To me was pleaſing; all my mind was ſet
Serious to learn and know. Paradiſe Regained.

The fathers looked on the worſhip of images as the moſt ſilly and childiſh thing in the world. Stillingfleet's Defence.

One that hath newly learn'd to ſpeak and go,
Loves childiſh plays. Roſcommon.

They have ſpoiled the beauty of the walls with abundance of childiſh ſentences, that conſiſt often in a jingle of words. Addiſon on Italy.

By converſation the childiſh humours of their younger days might be worn out. Arbuthnot's Hiſtory of J. Bull.

CHIL'DISHLY. adv. [from childiſh.] In a childiſh trifling way; like a child.

Together with his fame their infamy was ſpread, who had ſo raſhly and childiſhly ejected him. Hooker's Preface.

It is a thick miſty error, ſupported by ſome men of excellent judgment in their own profeſſions, but childiſhly unſkilful in any thing beſides. Hayward on Edward VI.

CHI'LDISHNESS. n. ſ. [from childiſh.]

1. Puerility; triflingneſs.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the ſuperſtition, credulity, and childiſhneſs of the Roman catholick religion. Addiſon on Italy.

2. Harmleſſneſs.

Speak thou, boy;
Perhaps thy childiſhneſs will move him more
Than can our reaſons. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

CHI'LDLESS. adj. [from child.] Without children; without offſpring.

As thy ſword hath made women childleſs, ſo ſhall thy mother be childleſs among women. 1 Samuel, xv. 33.

A man ſhall ſee the nobleſt works and foundations have proceeded from childleſs men; which have ſought to expreſs the images of their minds, where thoſe of their bodies have failed: ſo the care of poſterity is moſt in them that have no poſterity. Bacon's Eſſays.

Childleſs thou art, childleſs remain: ſo death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

---She can give you the reaſon why ſuch a one died childleſs: Spectator.

CHI'LDLIKE. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or beſeeming a child.

Who can owe no leſs than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care. Hooker.

I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cheriſh'd by her childlike duty. Shakeſp.

CHI'LIAD. n. ſ. [from χιλιας] A thouſand; a collection or ſum containing a thouſand.

We make cycles and periods of years; as decads, centuries, chiliads, &c. for the uſe of computation in hiſtory. Holder.

CHILIA'EDRON. n. ſ. [from χιλια.] A figure of a thouſand ſides.

In a man, who ſpeaks of a chiliaedron, or a body of a thouſand ſides, the idea of the figure may be very confuſed, though that of the number be very diſtinct. Locke.

CHILIFA'CTIVE. adj. [from chile.] That which makes chile.

Whether this be not effected by ſome way of corroſion, rather than any proper digeſtion, chilifactive mutation, or alimental converſion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CHILIFA'CTORY. adj. [from chile.] That which has the quality of making chile.

We ſhould rather rely upon a chilifactory menſtruum, or digeſtive preparation drawn from ſpecies or individuals, whoſe ſtomachs peculiarly diſſolve lapideous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [from chile.] The act of making chile.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigeſted in the ſtomach of the oſtriche; but we ſuſpect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendence to chyliſication, by the power of natural heat. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CHILL. adj. [cele, Sax.]

1. Cold; that which is cold to the touch.

And all my plants I ſave from nightly ill,
Of noiſom winds, and blaſting vapours chill. Milton.

2. Cold; having the ſenſation of cold; ſhivering with cold.

My heart, and my chill veins, now freezing with deſpair. Rowe's Royal Convert.

3. Depreſſed; dejected; diſcouraged.

CHILL. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] Chilneſs; cold.

I very well know one to have a ſort of chill about his præcordia and head. Derham's Phyſico-theology.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.

Age has not yet
So ſhrunk my ſinews, or ſo chill'd my veins,
But conſcious virtue in my breaſt remains. Dryden.

Heat burns his riſe, froſt chills his ſetting beams
And vex the world with oppoſite extremes. Creech.

Each changing ſeaſon does its poiſon bring;
Rheums chill the winter, agues blaſt the ſpring. Prior.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor ſhrill
Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

3. To depreſs; to deject; to diſcourage.

Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his ſpirits, and awakens terrors, which he cannot bear. Rogers's Sermons.

3. To blaſt with cold.

The fruits periſh on the ground,
Or ſoon decay, by ſnows immod'rate chill'd,
By winds are blaſted, or by lightning kill'd. Blackm. Creat.

CHI'LLINESS. n. ſ. [from chilly.] A ſenſation of ſhivering cold.

CHI'LLY. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.

A chilly ſweat bedews
My ſhudd'ring limbs. Philips.

CHI'LNESS. n. ſ. [from chill.] Coldneſs; want of warmth.

If you come out of the ſun ſuddenly into a ſhade, there followeth a chilneſs or ſhivering in all the body. Bacon.

This, while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,
A gen'rous chilneſs ſeizes ev'ry part,
The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryd.

CHIMB. n. ſ. [kime, Dut.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME. n. ſ. [The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Minſhew ſuppoſe it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henſhaw from chiamare, to call, becauſe the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only ſoftened from chirme, or churme, an old word for the ſound of many voices, or inſtruments making a noiſe together.]

1. The conſonant or harmonick ſound of many correſpondent inſtruments.

Hang our ſhaggy thighs with bells;
That, as we do ſtrike a tune,
In our dance, ſhall make a chime. Ben. Johnſon.

The ſound
Of inſtruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard, of harp and organ. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Love virtue, ſhe alone is free;
She can teach you how to climb
Higher than the ſphery chime. Milton.

2. The

2. The correſpondence of ſound.
Love firſt invented verſe, and form'd the rhime,
The motion meaſur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.
3. The ſound of bells, not rung by ropes, but ſtruck with hammers. In this ſenſe it is always uſed in the plural, chimes.
We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shakeſp.
4. The correſpondence of proportion or relation.
The conceptions of things are placed in their ſeveral degrees of ſimilitude; as in ſeveral proportions, one to another: in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reaſon is often drowned. Grew.

To CHIME. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To ſound in harmony or conſonance.
To make the rough recital aptly chime,
Or bring the ſum of Gallia's loſs to rhime,
'Tis mighty hard. Prior.
2. To correſpond in relation or proportion.
Father and ſon, huſband and wife, and ſuch other correlative terms, do belong one to another; and, through cuſtom, do readily chime, and anſwer one another, in people's memories. Locke.
3. To agree; to fall in with.
He not only ſat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the diſcourſe. Arbuthnot.
4. To ſuit with; to agree.
Any ſect, whoſe reaſonings, interpretation, and language, I have been uſed to, will, of courſe, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, ſeem harſh, ſtrange and uncouth to me. Locke.
5. To jingle; to clatter.
But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
And, wanting ſtrength to riſe, deſcend to rhime. Smith.

To CHIME. v. a. To move, or ſtrike, or ſound harmonically, or with juſt conſonancy.
With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
And chime their ſounding hammers in a row:
With labour'd anvils Ætna groans below. Dryden.
2. To ſtrike a bell with a hammer.

CHIME'RA. n. ſ. [Chimæra, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the exiſtence of the poetical chimera, a monſter feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.
In ſhort, the force of dreams is of a piece,
Chimeras all; and more abſurd, or leſs. Dryden.
No body joins the voice of a ſheep with the ſhape of a horſe, to be the complex ideas of any real ſubſtances, unleſs he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his diſcourſe with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIME'RICAL. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantaſtically conceived; fantaſtick.
Notwithſtanding the fineneſs of this allegory may atone for it in ſome meaſure, I cannot think that perſons of ſuch a chimerical exiſtence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spectat.

CHIME'RICALLY. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantaſtically.

To CHIP. v. a. [probably corrupted from chop.] To cut into ſmall pieces; to diminiſh, by cutting away a little at a time.
To return to our ſtatue in the block of marble, we ſee it ſometimes sometimes only begun to be chipped; sometimes rough hewn, and just sketched into an human figure. Addison.

The critick strikes out all that is not just;
And 'tis ev'n so the butler chips his crust. King's Cookery.

Industry
Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone. Thomson.

CHIP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrument.

Cucumbers do extremely affect moisture, and over-drink themselves, which chaff or chips forbiddeth. Bacon.

That chip made the iron swim, not by any natural power. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

The straw was laid below:
Of chips and serewood was the second row. Dryden.

2. A small piece, however made.

The manganese lies in the vein in lumps wrecked, in an irregular manner, among clay, coarse spar, and chips of stone. Woodward on Fossils.

CHI'PPING n. s. [from to chip.] A fragment cut off.

They dung their land with the chippings of a sort of soft stone. Mortimer.

The chippings and filings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton on the Classicks.

CHIRA'GRICAL. adj. [chiragra, Lat.] Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragrical persons do suffer in the finger as well as in the rest, and sometimes first of all. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CHIRO'GRAPHER. n. s. [χεὶρ, the hand, and γράφω, to write.] He that exercises or professes the act or business of writing.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirographer's, to be engrossed. Bacon.

CHIRO'GRAPHIST. n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes, by examining the hand: the true word is chiromancer, or chiromancer.

Let the phisiognomists examine his features; let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity. Arbuthnot.

CHIRO'GRAPHY. n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHIRO'MANCER. n. s. [See CHIROMANCY.] One that foretells future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle sort, who have not much to spare,
To chiromancers' cheaper art repair,
Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. vi.

CHIRO'MANCY. n. s. [χεὶρ, the hand, and μαντις, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chiromancy, that spots in the top of the nails do signify things past; in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, events to come. Broun's Vulgar Errours.

To CHIRP. v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up. The Dutch have circken.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away,
'Till hard by them both he and she did stay. Sidney.

Came he right now to sing a raven's note;
And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren
Can chase away the first conceived sound. Shakespeare.

No chirping lark the welkin sheen invokes. Gay.

The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around. Thomson.

To CHIRP. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin,
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle. Johnson.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.

CHIRP. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,
And chirp went the grashopper under our feet. Spectat.

CHI'RPER. n. s. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is chearful.

To CHIRRE. v. n. [ceopian, Sax.] See CHURME.

To coo as a pigeon. Junius.

CHIRU'RGEON. n. s. [χειρουργὸς, from χεὶρ, the hand, and ἔργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not seeing his need of a chirurgeon. South.

CHIRU'RGERY. n. s. [from chirurgeon.] The art of curing by external applications.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed. Sidney.

CHIRU'RGICAL. } adj. See CHIRURGEON.
CHIRU'RGICK. }

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold. Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first, according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual, doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments. Wilkins.

CHI'SEL. n. s. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her. Shakespeare.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroked them in oil. Wotton.

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin. Dryden.

To CHI'SEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT. n. s. [according to Dr. Hickes, from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chico, little, Span.]

1. A child; a baby. Generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jest. Arrowsmith.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew the chit or sprit at the root-end. Mortimer.

3. A freckle. [from chick pease.] In this sense it is folly used.

To CHIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth. Mortimer.

CHIT-CHAT. n. s. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of a female society, who call ourselves the chit-chat club. Spectator.

CHI'TTERLINGS. n. s. without singular. [from kutteln, Dut. Minsheu; from kutteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Skinner.

CHI'TTY. adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHI'VALROUS. adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. A word now out of use.

And noble minds of yore allied were
In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Spenser.

CHIVALRY. n. s. [chevalerie, Fr. knighthood, from cheval, a horse; as eques in Latin.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers. Bacon.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as valour; dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain
The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry. Shakespeare.

I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakespeare.

3. The general system of knighthood.

Solemnly he swore,
That by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,
And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,
He would not cease 'till he reveng'd their wrongs. Dryden.

4. An adventure; an exploit.

They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chivalries. Sidney.

5. The body or order of knights.

And by this light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shakespeare.

6. In law.

Servitium militare, of the French, chevalier; a tenure of land by knights service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received, for rents and services as they thought good: and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and rustick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord, and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king is properly called fergeantry, and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common perſon, as well as of the king, is called ſcutagium. Cowel.

7. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much uſed, but in old poems or romances.

CHIVES. n. ſ. [cive, Fr. Skinner.]

To CHOAK. See CHOKE.

CHO'COLATE. n. ſ. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cacao-tree.

The tree hath a roſe flower, of a great number of petals, from whoſe empalement ariſes the pointal, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit ſhaped ſomewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained ſeveral ſeeds, collected into an oblong heap, and ſtit down, ſomewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in ſeveral places between the tropicks, and grows wild. See Cocoa. Miller.

2. The cake or maſs, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao-nut with other ſubſtances, to be diſſolved in hot water.

The Spaniards were the firſt who brought chocolate into uſe in Europe, to promote the conſumption of their cacao-nuts, achiot, and other drugs, which their Weſt Indies furniſh, and which enter the compoſition of chocolate. Chambers.

3. The liquor, made by a ſolution of chocolate in hot water.

In fumes of burning chocolate ſhall glow,

CHO'COLATE-HOUSE. n. ſ. [chocolate and houſe.] A houſe where company is entertained with chocolate.

CHOICE. n. ſ. [choix, French.]

1. The act of chooſing; determination between different things propoſed; election.

If you oblige me ſuddenly to chuſe,
The choice is made; for I muſt both refuſe. Dryden.

Soft elocution doth thy ſtyle renown,
Gentle or ſharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to laſh at vice. Dryden.

2. The power of chooſing; election.

Choice there is not, unleſs the thing which we take to be ſo in our power, that we might have refuſed it. If fire conſume the ſtuble, it chooſeth not ſo to do, becauſe the nature thereof is ſuch that it can do no other. Hooker.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myſelf. L'Eſtr.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas all moral goodneſs conſiſteth in the elective act of the underſtanding will. Grew.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in chooſing; curioſity of diſtinction.

Julius Cæſar did write a collection of apophthegms: it is pity his book is loſt; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon.

4. The thing choſen; the thing taken or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not ſo rich in birth as beauty:
That you might well enjoy her. Shakeſpeare.

Take to thee, from among the cherubim,
Thy choice of flaming warriors. Milton.

Now Mars, ſhe ſaid, let fame exalt her voice;
Nor let thy conqueſts only be her choice. Prior.

5. The beſt part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the pſalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly alſo expreſs. Hooker.

Thou art a mighty prince: in the choice of our ſepulchres bury thy dead. Gen. xxiii. 6.

Their riders, the flow'r and choice
Of many provinces, from bound to bound. Milton.

6. Several things propoſed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntleſs ſpirits
Did never float upon the ſwelling tide. Shakeſp.

7. To make CHOICE of. To chooſe; to take from ſeveral things propoſed.

Wiſdom, of what herſelf approves, makes choice,
Nor is let captive by the common voice. Denham.

CHOICE. adj. [choiſi, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having ſet before the king the choiceſt of wines and fruits, told him the beſt part of his entertainment was to come. Guardian.

Thus in a ſea of folly toſs'd,
My choiceſt hours of life are loſt. Swift.

2. Chary; frugal; careful. Uſed of perſons.

He that is choice of his time, will alſo be choice of his company, and choice of his actions. Taylor's Holy Living.

CHO'ICELESS. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of chooſing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter, of which the cylinder is made, nor the round voluble form of it, are any more imputable to that dead choiceleſs creature, than the firſt motion of it was ſuppoſed to be; and, therefore, it cannot be a fit reſemblance to ſhew the reconcileableneſs of fate with choice Hammond on Fundamentals.

CHO'ICELY. adj. [from choice.]

1. Curiouſly; with exact choice.

A band of men,
Collected choicely from each county ſome. Shakeſp.

While prayers and tears his deſtin'd progreſs ſtay,
And crouds of mourners choke their ſov'reign's way. Tickell.

3. To hinder by obſtruction.

As two ſpent ſwimmers, that do cling together,

She cannot loſe her perfect pow'r to ſee,
Tho' miſts and clouds do choke her window-light. Davies.

It ſeemeth the fire is ſo choked, as not to be able to remove the ſtone. Bacon.

You muſt make the mould big enough to contain the whole fruit, when it is grown to the greateſt; for elſe you will choke the ſpreading of the fruit. Bacon.

The fire, which choak'd in aſhes lay,
A load too heavy for his ſoul to move,
Was upward blown below, and brush'd away by love. Dryd.

4. To ſuppreſs.

And yet we ventur'd; for the gain propos'd
Chok'd the reſpect of likely peril fear'd. Shakeſp.

Confeſs thee freely of thy ſin:
For to deny each article with oath,
Cannot remove nor choke the ſtrong conception
That I do groan withal. Shakeſpeare.

5. To overpower; to ſuppreſs.

And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleaſures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. Luke, viii. 14.

No fruitful crop the ſickly fields return;
But oats and darnel choke the riſing corn. Dryden.

COCK. n. ſ. [cocc, Saxon; coq, French.]
1. The male to the hen; a domeſtick fowl, remarkable for his gallantry, pride, and courage.
Cocks have great combs and ſpurs; hens, little or none. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.
True cocks o' th' game,
That never aſk for what, or whom, they fight;
But turn 'em out, and ſhew 'em but a foe,
Cry liberty, and that's a cauſe of quarrel. Dryden.
The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around,
Fed and defended by the fearleſs cock. Thomſon.
2. The male of any ſmall birds.
He was confirmed in this by obſerving, that calves and philoſophers, tygers and ſtateſmen, cock ſparrows and coquets, exactly reſemble one another in the formation of the pineal gland. Arbuthnot.
3. The weathercock, that ſhews the direction of the wind by turning.
You cataracts and hurricanoes ſpout,
'Till you have drench'd our ſteeples, drown'd the cocks! Shakeſpeare's King Lear.
4. A ſpout to let out water at will, by turning the ſtop.
When every room
Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minſtrelſy,
I have retir'd me to a waſteful cock,
And ſet mine eyes at flow. Shakeſpeare.
It were good there were a little cock made in the belly of the upper glaſs. Bacon.

13. The needle of a balance.
14. Cock on the hoop. Triumphant; exulting.

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop? Camden.

You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock a hoop! Shakespeare.

For Hudibras, who thought h' had won
The field, as certain as a gun,
And having routed the whole troop,
With victory was cock a hoop. Hudibras.

To COCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set erect; to hold bolt upright, as a cock holds his head.

This is that muscle which performs the motion so often mentioned by the Latin poets, when they talk of a man's cocking his nose, or playing the rhinoceros. Addison.

Our Lightfoot barks, and cocks his ears; Gay.
O'er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears.

Dick would cock his nose in scorn, Swift.
But Tom was kind and loving.

2. To set up the hat with an air of petulance and pertness.

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,

CO'CKMASTER. n. s. [cock and master.] One that breeds game cocks.

CO'CKMATCH. n. s. [cock and match.] Cockfight for a prize.

At the same time that the heads of parties preserve towards one another an outward shew of good breeding, their tools will not so much as mingle together at a cockmatch. Addison's Spectator.

Though quail-fighting is what is most taken notice of, they had doubtless cockmatches also. Arbuthnot.

CO'CKNEY. n. s. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, Païs de cocaigne, for a country of dainties.

Paris est pour un riche un païs de cocaigne. Boileau.

Of this word they are not able to settle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem:

Far in see by west Spayng,
Is a lond yhote Cocayng.

On which Dr. Hickes has his remark:

Nunc coquin, coquine. Quæ olim apud Gallos otio, gulæ & ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavam, desidiosum, desidiosam, segnem significabant. Hinc urbanos utpote à rusticis laboribus ad vitam sedentariam, & quasi desidiosam avocatos pagani nostri olim cokaignes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et poëta hic noster in monachos & moniales, ut segne genus hominum, qui desidiæ dediti, ventri indulgebant, & coquinæ amatores erant, malevolentissime invehitur, monasteria & monasticam vitam in descriptione terræ cockaincæ, parabolice perstringens.]

1. A native of London, by way of contempt.

So the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' th' pasty alive. Shakespeare.

For who is such a cockney in his heart,
Proud of the plenty of the southern part,
To scorn that union, by which we may
Boast 'twas his countryman that writ this play. Dorset.

The cockney, travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

2. Any effeminate, ignorant, low, mean, despicable citizen.

I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney. Shakespeare.

COCOA. n. ſ. [cacaotal, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao.]

A ſpecies of palm-tree, cultivated in moſt of the inhabited parts of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies; but thought a native of the Maldives. It is one of the moſt uſeful trees to the inhabitants of America. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the ſhell into drinking bowls. The kernel of the nut affords them a wholeſome food, and the milk contained in the ſhell a cooling liquor. The leaves of the trees are uſed for thatching their houſes, and are alſo wrought into baſkets, and moſt other things that are made of oſiers in Europe. Miller.

The cacao or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure, much reſembling a large olive in ſize and ſhape. It is compoſed of a thin but hard and woody coat or ſkin, of a dark blackiſh colour; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleſhy, dry, firm, and fattiſh to the touch, of a duſky colour, an agreeable ſmell, and a pleaſant and peculiar taſte. It was unknown to us 'till the diſcovery of America, where the natives not only drank the liquor made from the nuts, in the manner we do chocolate, but alſo uſed them as money. The tree is not very tall, but grows regularly, and is of a beautiful form, eſpecially when loaded with its fruit. Its ſtem is of the thickneſs of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height; its bark rough, and full of tubercles; and its leaves ſix or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers ſtand on the branches, and even on the trunk of the tree, in cluſters, each having its own pedicle, an inch and ſometimes leſs in length: they are ſmall, of a yellowiſh colour, and are ſucceeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, reſembling a cucumber, five, ſix, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickneſs; and, when fully ripe, it is of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit are lodged the cocoa nuts, uſually about thirty in number. This tree flowers twice or three times in the year, and ripens as many ſeries of fruits. Hill.

Give me to drain the cocoa's milky bowl,
And from the palm to draw its freſhening wine. Thomſon.

Co'CTILE. adj. [coctilis, Lat.] Made by baking, as a brick.

Co'CTION. n. ſ. [coctio, Lat.] The act of boiling.

COFFEE. n. ſ. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced cabeu by the Turks, and cahuah by the Arabs.] The tree is a ſpecies of Arabick JESSAMINE, which ſee.

It is found to ſucceed as well in the Caribbee iſlands as in their native place of growth: but whether the coffee produced in the Weſt Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will diſcover. The berry brought from the Levant is moſt eſteemed; and the berry, when ripe, is found as hard as horn. Miller.

COFFEE alſo denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for theſe eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Some refer the invention of coffee to the Perſians; from whom it was learned, in the fifteenth century, by a mufti of Aden, a city near the mouth of the Red Sea, where it ſoon came in vogue, and paſſed from thence to Mecca, and from Arabia Felix to Cairo. From Egypt the uſe of coffee advanced to Syria and Conſtantinople. Thevenot, the traveller, was the firſt who brought it into France; and a Greek ſervant, called Paſqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turky merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, firſt ſet up the profeſſion of coffeeman, and introduced the drink among us; though ſome ſay Dr. Harvey had uſed it before. Chambers.

They have in Turky a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the ſame name, as black as ſoot, and of a ſtrong ſcent, but not aromatical; which they take, beaten into powder, in water, as hot as they can drink it. This drink comforteth the brain and heart, and helpeth digeſtion. Bacon.

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the ſpoon. Pope.

COLLU'SION. n. f. [colluſio, Latin.]

Colluſion is, in our common law, a deceitful agreement or compact between two or more, for the one part to bring an action againſt the other to ſome evil purpoſe; as to defraud a third of his right. Cowel.

By the ignorance of the merchants, or diſhoneſty of weavers, or the colluſion of both, the ware was bad, and the price exceſſive. Swift.

COLLU'SIVE. adj. [from collude.] Fraudulently concerted. See COLLUSION.

COLLU'SIVELY. adv. [from colluſive.] In a manner fraudulently concerted.

COLLU'SORY. adj. [from colludo, Lat.] Carrying on a fraud by ſecret concert.

CO'LLY. n. f. [from coal.] The ſmut of coal.

Suppoſe thou ſaw her dreſſed in ſome old hirſute attire, out of faſhion, coarſe raiment, beſmeared with ſoot, colly, perfumed with opopanax. Burton.

To CO'LLY. v. a. To grime with coal; to ſmut with coal.

Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a ſpeen, unfolds both heav'n and earth;
And, ere a man hath pow'r to ſay behold,
The jaws of darkneſs do devour it up. Shakeſpeare.

COLLY'RIUM. n. f. [Latin.] An ointment for the eyes.

CO'LMAR. n. f. [Fr.] A ſort of PEAR, which ſee.

CO'LOGN Earth. n. f. Is a deep brown, very light baſtard ochre, which, though generally eſteemed an earth, is no pure native foſſil; but contains more vegetable than mineral matter, and owes its origin to the remains of wood long buried in the earth. It is dug in France and Germany, particularly about Cologn, nor is England without it. Hill.

CO'LON. n. f. κῶλον.]

1. A point [:] uſed to mark a pauſe greater than that of a comma, and leſs than that of a period. Its uſe is not very exactly fixed, nor is it very neceſſary, being confounded by moſt with the ſemicolon. It was uſed before punctuation was refined, to mark almoſt any ſenſe leſs than a period. To apply it properly, we ſhould place it, perhaps, only where the ſenſe is continued without dependence of grammar or conſtruction; as, I love him, I deſpiſe him: I have long ceaſed to truſt, but ſhall never forbear to ſuccour him.
2. The greateſt and wideſt of all the inteſtines, about eight or nine hands breadth long. It begins where the ilium ends in the cavity of the os ilium on the right ſide; from thence aſcending by the kidney, on the ſame ſide, it paſſes under the concav concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum, in the rectum. Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I strain my guts, my colon wound. Swift.

The contents of the colon are of a sour, fetid, acid smell in rabbits. Floyer on the Humours.

CO'LONEL. n. s. [Of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it originally colonialis, the leader of a colony. Minshew deduces it from columna, a pillar; as patriæ columen: exercitus columen. Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally sounded with only two distinct syllables, col'nel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison. Spenser.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms;
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,
If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms. Milton.

CO'LONELSHIP. n. s. [from colonel.] The office or character of colonel.

While he continued a subaltern, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that colonelship was coming fast upon him. Swift.

To CO'LONISE. v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies.

There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the Christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory; so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention. Bacon.

Druina hath advantage by acquest of islands, which she colonizeth and fortifieth daily. Howel.

COLONNA'DE. n. s. [from colonna, Ital. a column.]

1. A peristyle of a circular figure, or a series of columns, disposed in a circle, and insulated within side. Builder's Dict.

2. Any series or range of pillars.

For you my colonnades extend their wings. Pope.

CO'LONY. n. s. [colonia, Latin.]

1. A body of people drawn from the mother-country to inhabit some distant place.

To these new inhabitants and colonies he gave the same law under which they were born and bred. Spenser.

Rooting out these two rebellious septs, he placed English colonies in their rooms. Davies on Ireland.

Osiris, or the Bacchus of the ancients, is reported to have civilized the Indians, planting colonies and building cities. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The country planted; a plantation.

The rising city, which from far you see,
Is Carthage; and a Trojan colony Dryden.

COLOPHONY. n. s. [from Colophon, a city whence it came.] Rosin.

Of Venetian turpentine, slowly evaporating about a fourth or fifth part, the remaining substance suffered to cool, would afford me a coherent body, or a fine colophony. Boyle.

Turpentines and oils leave a colophony, upon the separation of their thinner oil. Floyer on the Humours.

COLOQUI'NTEDA. n. s. [coloquinthis, Lat. κολόκυνθις.] The fruit of a plant of the same name, brought from the Levant, about the bigness of a large orange, and often called bitter apple. Its colour is a sort of golden brown: its inside is full of kernels, which are to be taken out before it be used. Both the seed and pulp are intolerably bitter. It is a violent purgative, of considerable use in medicine. Chambers.

CO'LORATE. adj. [coloratus, Latin.] Coloured; died; marked or stained with some colour.

Had the tunicles and humours of the eye been colorate, many rays proceeding from visible objects would have been stopt. Ray on the Creation.

COLORA'TION. n. s. [colero, Latin.]

1. The art or practice of colouring.
2. The state of being coloured.

Amongst curiosities I shall place coloration, though it be somewhat better; for beauty in flowers is their preheminence. Bacon's Natural History.

COLORI'FICK. adj. [colorificus, Latin.] That which has the power of producing dies, tints, colours, or hues.

In this composition of white, the several rays do not suffer any change in their colorifick qualities by acting upon one another; but are only mixed, and by a mixture of their colours produce white. Newton's Opticks.

COLO'SSE. } n. s. [colossus, Latin.] A statue of enormous
COLO'SSUS. } magnitude.

Not to mention the walls and palace of Babylon, the pyramids of Egypt, or colosse of Rhodes. Temple.

There huge colossus rose, with trophies crown'd,
And runick characters were grav'd around. Pope.

COLOSSE'AN. adj. [colosseus, Lat.] In form of a colossus; of the height and bigness of such a statue; giantlike.

CO'LOUR. n. s. [color, Latin.]

1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; die.

It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various colours to be different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner, according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which the surfaces of those bodies are composed. Watts's Logick.

Her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Shakesp.

For though our eyes can nought but colours see,
Yet colours give them not their power of sight. Davies.

The lights of colours are more refrangible one than another in this order; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet. Newton's Opticks.

2. The freshness; or appearance of blood in the face.

My cheeks no longer did their colour boast. Dryden.

3. The tint of the painter.

When each bold figure just begins to live,
The treach'rous colours the fair art betray,
And all the bright creation fades away. Pope.

4. The representation of any thing superficially examined.

Whose wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.

5. Concealment; palliation; excuse; superficial cover.

It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. Shakesp.

Their sin admitted no colour or excuse. K. Charles.

6. Appearance; pretence; false shew.

Under the colour of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer. Shakesp.

Merchants came to Rhodes with a great ship laded with corn, under the colour of the sale whereof they noted all that was done in the city. Knolles.

7. Kind; species; character.

Boys and women are, for the most part, cattle of this colour. Shakesp. As you like it.

8. In the plural, a standard; an ensign of war: they say the colours of the foot, and standard of horse.

He at Venice gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long. Shakesp.

Against all checks, rebukes, and manners,
I must advance the colours of my love,
And not retire. Shakespeare.

The banks on both sides were filled with companies, passing all along the river under their colours, with trumpets sounding. Knolles's History of the Turks.

An author compares a ragged coin to a tattered colours. Ad.

To CO'LOUR. v. a. [coloro, Latin.]

1. To mark with some hue, or die.

The rays, to speak properly, are not coloured: in them there is nothing else than a certain power and disposition to stir up a sensation of this or that colour. Newton.

2. To palliate; to excuse; to dress in specious colours, or fair appearances.

I told him, that I would not favour or colour in any sort his former folly. Raleigh's Essays.

He colours the falsehood of Æneas by an express command from Jupiter to forsake the queen. Dryden.

3. To make plausible.

We have scarce heard of an insurrection that was not coloured with grievances of the highest kind, or countenanced by one or more branches of the legislature. Add son.

4. To COLOUR a stranger's goods, is when a freeman allows a foreigner to enter goods at the customhouse in his name; so that the foreigner pays but single duty, when he ought to pay double. Philips.

To CO'LOUR. v. n. To blush. A low word, only used in conversation.

CO'LOURABLE. adj. [from colour.] Specious; plausible. It is now little used.

They have now a colourable pretence to withstand innovations, having accepted of other laws and rules already. Spenser.

They were glad to lay hold on so colourable a matter, and to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovation. Hooker.

Had I sacrificed ecclesiastical government and revenues to their covetousness and ambition, they would have found no colourable necessity of an army. K. Charles.

We hope the mercy of God will consider us unto some miseration of our offences; yet had not the sincerity of our parents so colourable expectations. Brown.

Co'LOURABLY. adv. [from colourable.] Speciously; plausibly.

Co'LOURED participial adj. [from colour.] Streaked; diversified with variety of hues.

The coloured are coarser juiced, and therefore not so well and equally concocted. Bacon.

Co'LOURING. n. s. [from colour.] The part of the painter's art that teaches to lay on his colours with propriety and beauty.

From line drawn true, our eye may trace
A foot, a knee, a hand, a face;
Yet if the colouring be not there,
At best 'twill only not displease. Prior.

Co'LOURIST. n. s. [from colour.] A painter who excels in giving the proper colours to his designs.

Titian, Paul Veronese, Van Dyck, and the rest of the good colourists, have come nearest to nature. Dryden.

Co'LOURLESS. adj. [from colour.] Without colour; not distinguished by any hue; transparent.

Transparent substances, as glass, water and air, when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherways formed into plates, exhibit various colours, according to their various thinness; although, at a greater thickness, they appear very clear and colourless. Newton.

Pellucid colourless glass or water, by being beaten into a powder or froth, do acquire a very intense whiteness. Bentley.

COLT. n. s. [colt, Saxon.]

1. A young horse: used commonly for the male offspring of a horse, as foal for the female.

The colt hath about four years of growth, and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon's Natural History.

Like colts or unmanaged horses, we start at dead bones and lifeless blocks. Taylor's Holy Living.

No sports, but what belong to war, they know;
To break the stubborn colt, to bend the bow. Dryd.

2. A young foolish fellow.

Ay, that's a colt, indeed; for he doth nothing but talk of his horse. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

To COLT. v. n. [from the noun.] To frisk; to be licentious; to run at large without rule; to riot; to frolick.

CO'MET. n. ſ. [cometa, Latin, a hairy ſtar.]
A heavenly body in the planetary region appearing ſuddenly, and again diſappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit, like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipſes, having one of their foci in the center of the ſun; and being very long and eccentrick, they become inviſible, when in that part moſt remote from the ſun. Comets, popularly called blazing ſtars, are diſtinguiſhed from other ſtars by a long train or tail of light, always oppoſite to the ſun: hence ariſes a popular diviſion of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the diviſion rather relates to the different circumſtances of the ſame comet, than to the phænomena of the ſeveral. Thus when the comet is eaſtward of the ſun, and moves from it, the comet is ſaid to be bearded, barbatus, becauſe the light marches before it. When the light is weſtward of the ſun, the comet is ſaid to be tailed, becauſe the train follows it. When the comet and the ſun are diametrically oppoſite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Iſaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin ſlender vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by their near neighbourhood to the ſun, and this vapour is furniſhed by the atmoſphere of the comet. The tails are of various lengths; and being produced in the perihelions of the comets, will go off along with their heads into remote regions, and there gradually vaniſh, 'till the comets return towards the ſun. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffuſed through all the celeſtial regions, may probably, by little and little, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmoſpheres. For the conſervation of the water, and moiſture of the planets, comets ſeem abſolutely requiſite; from whoſe condenſed vapours and exhalations all that moiſture which is ſpent in vegetations and putrefaction, and turned into dry earth, may be reſupplied and recruited; for all vegetables grow and increaſe wholly from fluids; and, as to their greateſt part, turn by putrefaction into earth again, an earthy ſlime being perpetually precipitated to the bottom of putrefying liquors. Hence the quantity of dry earth muſt continually increaſe, and the moiſture of the globe decreaſe, and at laſt be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual ſupply from ſome part or other of the univerſe. And I ſuſpect, adds Sir Iſac, that the ſpirit which makes the fineſt, ſubtileſt, and beſt part of our air, and which is abſolutely requiſite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets. On this principle there ſeems to be ſome foundation for the popular opinion of preſages from comets; ſince the tail of a comet, thus intermingled with our atmoſphere, may produce changes very ſenſible in animal and vegetable bodies.

The ſame great author has computed that the ſun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was to his heat with us at Midſummer, as twenty-eight thouſand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet, was near two thouſand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He alſo calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimenſions of our earth, would ſcarce be cool in fifty thouſand years. If then the comet be ſuppoſed to cool a hundred times as faſt as red-hot iron, yet, ſince its heat was a thouſand times greater, ſuppoſing it of the bigneſs of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years. Hitherto no comet has threatened the earth with a nearer approach than that of 1680, for, by calculation, Dr. Halley found, on November 11, that comet was not above one ſemidiameter of the earth to the northward of the way of the earth; at which time, had the earth been in that part of its orbit, the comet would have had a parallax equal to that of the moon. What might have been the conſequence of ſo near an approach? a contact or ſhock of the celeſtial bodies? a deluge, Mr. Whiſton ſays. Aſtronomers have been divided about the return of comets, and time and obſervation muſt determine the queſtion. However, Dr. Halley has foretold the return of one in 1758, which formerly appeared in 1456. Treatiſe. Chambers.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they ſaw ſome wond'rous monument,
Some comet, or an unuſual prodigy. Shakeſpeare.

In CO'MMON.

1. Equally to be participated by a certain number.

By making an explicite conſent of every commoner neceſſary to any one's appropriating to himſelf any part of what is given in common, children or ſervants could not cut the meat which their father or maſter had provided for them in common, without aſſigning to every one his peculiar part. Locke.

2. Equally with another; indiſcriminately.

In a work of this nature it is impoſſible to avoid puerilities, it having that in common with dictionaries, and books of antiquities. Arbuthnot.

To CO'MMON. v. n. [from the noun.] To have a joint right with others in ſome common ground.

COMMON LAW contains thoſe cuſtoms and uſages which have, by long preſcription, obtained in this nation the force of laws. It is diſtinguiſhed from the ſtatute law, which owes its authority to acts of parliament.

COMMON PLEAS. The king's court now held in Weſtminſter-hall; but anciently moveable. Gwin obſerves, that 'till Henry III. granted the magna charta there were but two courts, the exchequer, and the king's bench, ſo called becauſe it followed the king; but upon the grant of that charter, the court of common pleas was erected, and ſettled at Weſtminſter. All civil cauſes, both real and perſonal, are or were formerly, tried in this court, according to the ſtrict laws of the realm; and Forteſcue repreſents it as the only court for real cauſes. The chief judge is called the lord chief juſtice of the common pleas, and he is aſſiſted by three or four aſſociates, created by letters patent from the king. Cowel.

CO'MMONABLE. adj. [from common.] What is held in common.

Much good land might be gained from foreſts and chaſes, and from other commonable places, ſo as there be care taken that the poor commoners have no injury. Bacon.

I turned to my commonplace-book, and found his caſe under the word coquette. Tatler.

CO'MMONS n. ſ.

1. The vulgar; the lower people; thoſe who inherit no honours.

Little office
The hateful commons will perform for us;
Except, like curs, to tear us all in pieces. Shakeſpeare.

Hath he not paſs'd the nobles and the commons? Shakeſp.

Theſe three to kings and chiefs their ſcenes diſplay,
The reſt before th' ignoble commons play. Dryden's Fables.

The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can: the nobler ſort,
With winding doors wide open, front the court. Dryden.

2. The lower houſe of parliament, by which the people are repreſented, and of which the members are choſen by the people.

My good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majeſty
Incline to it, or no? Shakeſp. Henry VI.

In the houſe of commons many gentlemen, unſatisfied of his guilt, durſt not condemn him. King Charles.

3. Food; fare; diet: ſo called from colleges, where it is eaten in common.

He painted himſelf of a dove-colour, and took his commons with the pigeons. L'Eſtrange.

Mean while ſhe quench'd her fury at the flood,
And with a lenten ſallad cool'd her blood:
Their commons, though but coarſe, were nothing ſcant;
Nor did their minds an equal banquet want. Dryden.

The doctor now obeys the ſummons,
Likes both his company and commons;
Diſplays his talent; ſits till ten;
Next day invited, comes again. Swift.

COMMONWE'AL.
COMMONWE'ALTH. } n. ſ. [from common and weal, or wealth.]

1. A polity; an eſtabliſhed form of civil life.

Two foundations bear up public ſocieties; the one inclination, whereby all men deſire ſociable life; the other an order agreed upon, touching the manner of their union in living together: the latter is that which we call the law of a commonweal. Hooker.

It was impoſſible to make a commonweal in Ireland, without ſettling of all the eſtates and poſſeſſions throughout the kingdom. Davies on Ireland.

A continual parliament would but keep the commonweal in tune, by preſerving laws in their vigour. King Charles.

There is no body in the commonwealth of learning who does not profeſs himſelf a lover of truth. Locke.

2. The publick; the general body of the people.

Such a prince,
So kind a father of the commonweal. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

And at that instant, like a babe, sprung up. Shakespeare.

Our own productions flatter us: it is impossible not to be fond of them at the moment of their conception. Dryden.

3. Notion; idea; image in the mind.

As conceptions are the images or resemblances of things to the mind within itself, in the like manner are words or names the marks, tokens, or resemblances of those conceptions to the minds of them whom we converse with. South.

Consult the acutest poets and speakers, and they will confess that their quickest, most admired conceptions were such as darted into their minds, like sudden flashes of lightning, they knew not how, nor whence; and not by any certain consequence, or dependence of one thought upon another, as it is in matters of ratiocination. South.

To have right conceptions about them, we must bring our understandings to the inflexible natures and unalterable relations of things, and not endeavour to bring things to any preconceived notions of our own. Locke.

4. Sentiments; purpose.

Thou but remember'st me of my own conception. I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shakespeare.

Please your highness, note
His dangerous conception in this point:
Not friended by his wish to your high person,
His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends. Shakespeare.

5. Apprehension; knowledge.

And as if beasts conceiv'd what reason were,
And that conception should distinctly show
They should the name of reasonable bear;
For, without reason, none could reason know. Davies.

6. Conceit; sentiment; pointed thought.

He is too flatulent sometimes, and sometimes too dry; many times unequal, and almost always forced; and, besides, is full of conceptions, points of epigram, and witticisms; all which are not only below the dignity of heroic verse, but contrary to its nature. Dryden.

CO'NSTABLE. n. ſ. [comes ſtabuli, as it is ſuppoſed.]

1. Lord high conſtable is an ancient officer of the crown, long diſuſed in England, but lately ſubſiſting in France; where the conſtable commanded the mareſchals, and was the firſt officer of the army. The function of the conſtable of England conſiſted in the care of the common peace of the land, in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the conſtable and marſhal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blaſonry of arms within it. The firſt conſtable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary 'till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aſide, as being ſo powerful as to become troubleſome to the king. From theſe mighty magiſtrates are derived the inferior conſtables of hundred and franchiſes; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be choſen in every hundred for the conſervation of the peace, and view of armour. Theſe are now called high conſtables, becauſe continuance of time, and increaſe both of people and offences, have occaſioned others in every town of like nature, but inferior authority, called petty conſtables. Beſides theſe, we have conſtables denominated from particular places; as conſtable of the Tower, of Dover caſtle, of the caſtle of Carnarvon; but theſe are properly caſtellani, or governors of caſtles. Cowel. Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high conſtable,
And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun. Shak.
The knave conſtable had ſet me i' th' ſtocks, i' th' common ſtocks, for a witch. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.
